SHINGLES AND SHAKES at the SAW MILL.

A DEUMMER'S POEM.

(The following is by E. A. Barnes, a well known commercial traveler, with headquarters at Portland, who does the valley.)
The Whiskey man will take from you most every thing you earn
And you'll have naught to show for it,
while he has coin to burn;
With wives and children starving,
which ever way you turn,
If you march on to destruction.

Chorus.

Hurrah! Hurrah! the devil take the rum;
Hurrah! Hurrah! I'll never be a bum;
I'm going to lead a decent life,
From now till kingdom come,
I've switched from the road to destruction.

Awake my friends, bestir yourselves,
don't pass your time away,
In idleness, where congregated, a thirsty crowd each day.
Go back to wife and children, or mother, old and gray;
Ere you march on to destruction.

Can't you see you're needed, where your wife and children are?
Don't stand there spending all your earnings o'er the bar;
Think about your little ones, make them your guiding star,
Save them all from destruction.

The whiskey man lives like a king, upon the avenue;
Eats a porterhouse for lunch, while chuck will do for you;
He buys sealskins for his wife, and yours gets nothing new,
Yet you march on to destruction.

Can't you hear the warning that comes from near and far;
Can't you get a ride upon the good old water car?
If you don't you'll finish in a Jew three ball Bazaar,
On the road to destruction.

Then you'll have the time to think, of what it might have been;
While you're workin' overtime, servin' in the pen.
Your life dream's just a bubble, that's bursted once again,
When you've arrived at destruction.
