THE LORIMER CASE IN MATHEMATICS.

Washington, Feb. 3.—The senate gallery and all, were put to a hard study in figures a few days ago when Senator Cummins was concluding his two hour speech on the Lorimer case. They badly needed our mathematical genius, Prof. David Torbet, to help them out. There were 202 votes cast in the Illinois legislature. Of these Lorimer received 108, which was a clear majority.

But it seemed to be generally admitted that seven had been bought, four more probably bought and still four more possibly corrupt. Senator Cummins contended that with seven votes rejected Lorimer had only 101 votes, when it was necessary to have 102, a majority, to elect.

Senator Bailey interrupted with some heat and said Senator Lorimer with the rejection of the seven would still have a majority. He insisted so strenuously for this that he was asked to explain. He claimed that when the seven were found corrupt they were of course thrown out of the count for Lorimer; but must also be thrown out of the total vote cast, so that then only 98 were required to elect and Lorimer had 101 votes remaining.

Senator Cummins claimed this gave the advantage to corruption. He said if only one vote had been bought on this basis the senator would be elected and hold his seat whether the corrupt vote was discovered and rejected or not. If the false vote was not discovered he would have 102, a majority of two, or if that vote was rejected he would have 101 which was a majority of 201. If he had not made that purchase he could not have been elected. He might have bought that vote knowing that it would be discovered and rejected and yet knowing it would secure his election.

Several senators butted in to help them out, but it was not left in a very satisfactory understanding. They seemed to be in a daze, for Senator Bailey is a strong man. A good many pencils were at work in the gallery and curious results secured. If he bought seven votes and they are subtracted from his majority, and also from the whole vote, he still has a majority. If he bought four more, as likely, and they should be subtracted both from his vote and the whole count he would have left a majority; but, if he also bought the other four suspected and they should be rejected in the same way he would fall one short of a majority. If he had as he claims 101 honest votes, it looks like an egregious blunder to buy more than just one vote to turn the balance in his favor. If the senate figures the vote in this way, and Senator Bailey gave notice that he would at an early day address the senate in its support, Senator Lorimer will retain his seat. It is not likely they will prove corruption on fifteen legislators. On the other hand, if the corrupt voters are cast out of Lorimer's majority and yet counted in the number he is to overcome, they seem to be voters and yet not voters at the same time. The senators all declare appearance of corrupt election, and any corrupt bargain in their own cases is unthinkable. J. C. ELLIOTT.
