One of the richest displays of costumes ever seen in a moving picture is that at the Empir in the betrayal of Charles, an old-time story well portrayed. Those were gorgeous days when Henry VI reigned in England and Charles in France.

Paid in Full was presented last night at the opera house to a good sized audience, by one of the best companies that has been here, strong at every point. The play itself, though, is not one to be commended, full of suggestion, and while it may teach a lesson, it is very doubtful if the stage is the place for it, in the manner in which given.

MARJORIE MAHR COMING.

My dear Albany Friends:—
I am at last going to realize the pleasure of seeing you, for I am able to travel again and I want to thank you "my friends" personally for the interest you took in me during my illness and long stay in the hospital; when I met my accident and was taken to the hospital in an unconscious condition I remained in the state of a livion for several days fighting unconsciousness for my life, and when I at last woke to realization, you cannot imagine my surprise at finding that I had lost both of my limbs and I could not recall just what had caused such a calamity to befall me. I opened my eyes and saw the Rosary and Cross lying on my breast, an holding my hand very tenderly was one of God's messengers on his knees praying to our Almighty for my life; I did not care to live—for I had taken form me—my means of making my living,—for you know I was a show girl in musical comedy, and danced. I soon got better and while I had no relatives, you and all the people of Oregon were so good in your letters of sympathy I am going to be with you Monday, Feb. 19th, if God wills, and want to see you so I can thank you from the stage for all you did for me. I can walk with my artificial limbs, but as I had to learn all over again, "as when a baby," I am just a little slow, so I know my friends you will be patient.
Sincerely,
MARJORIE MAHR.

MISFITS.

Misrepresentation means misery.
Two terms as president is enough.
Bump the get rich quick concerns.
The Gov. is now solid with the women.
The average cartoonist is merely a mud-thrower.
A street can petition for any kind of pavement it wishes.
We would be ashamed to have Eugene people go along Fifth street on the O. E., without pavement.
A London physician has discovered that children in the slums, without tooth brushes, have the best teeth.
The Oregonian says eastern Oregon is strong for Taft, but whenever a test vote is taken it shows five to one for Roosevelt.
Men who have to go away to sell their real estate, stock, etc., as a rule need watching mighty close, a fact suggested by the Lavey arrest in Portland.

The Old Song of the South.

The lovers of the good old time melodies will be certainly well entertained next Tuesday with the delightful tunes of the old Southern Ballads of the times "Befo de War". Culligan & Hockwald's minstrels has always been a company especially selected by the management for their singing quality. It has long been conceded that no one can get the harmony and music of those songs like the real darkey.

"What We See Is Forever Stamped on the Mind" declares Arthur Brisbane, the celebrated editorial writer. He adds:

"We have lived on this planet using our eyes as men for thousands of years. And the animals learned and formed impressions by using their eyes millions upon millions of years before man appeared upon the globe."

We are employing these quotations to drive home the advertising value of the Electric Sign. Here you have flaming letters and action, too, if you wish—a combination bound to attract the attention and impress the memory.
