A Valuable Oak Tree.

At the Linn & Benton office may be seen a solid mass of stuff resembling chamois skin, which Warren Hulbert, residing near Abbany, found in the center of an oak tree. In fact a slice of it is about as tough as chamois, which life resembles in a remarkable manner. How much there is of this on Mr. Hulbert's farm is not known; but it suggests an opportunity for promotion of a great industry. It is easy to figure out enormous possibilities if Mr. Hulbert has sufficient of the stuff hidden away in his trees. Chamois skins costly, and there ought to be millions in it.
