

WASHINGTON.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26th, 1888.

Mr. Cleveland and all the members of his Cabinet have gone into temporary seclusion in order to prepare their annual reports for Congress. These reports will differ from those usually made inasmuch as they will give a general resume of the Democratic administration of the affairs of each of the Governmental Departments for four years. Copies of these reports and of the President's coming message based thereon should be carefully read by every Democrat in the country.

The President has taken a hand in the dispute between Senator Blackburn and Judge Rucker. He has no recollection of ever having seen Judge Rucker, and is positive that he never used any such language as Rucker ascribes to him. The weight of common sense is all on Mr. Cleveland's side in this matter. Does any one suppose for a moment, even allowing that Mr. Cleveland had doubts about the sincerity of Governor Hill's and Tammany Hall's support, which he never at any time had, nor has he now, that he would have given expression of those doubts to a perfect stranger, as Judge Rucker was, five days previous to the election? Not at all. This disposes of the question at issue between Senator Blackburn and Judge Rucker and proves the latter to have been in the wrong, but it does not wipe out the hard things they have said about each other. It is said that a challenge has already been sent. Every body here is anxious to know what the outcome will be. Both men are expected here shortly.

Mr. Morton, the Vice-president-elect, paid Washington an unexpected visit last week. He came ostensibly to look after his real estate investments here, but before leaving he held several conferences with prominent members of his party.

Hon. Perry Belmont, recently appointed Minister to Spain, is here to receive his final instructions from the State Department before going to his post. It has been intimated that Mr. Blaine would attempt to prevent the confirmation of Mr. Belmont's nomination by the Senate, in order to be revenged upon that gentleman for the clever manner in which he, as chairman of the House committee on foreign affairs, exposed Mr. Blaine's manipulation of South American affairs during the Shepherd investigation some years ago. Perhaps Mr. Blaine would like very much to do so, but the fact must be remembered that there are quite a number of republican Senators who heartily dislike Mr. Blaine, and who would much rather do him an injury than a favor. Mr. Belmont is sure to be confirmed, whether Mr. Blaine tries to prevent it or not.

Newspaper men here are pleased at the selection of Mr. Halford, editor of the Indianapolis Journal, for President-elect Harrison's private secretary. Mr. Halford will be fortunate if he succeeds in making himself as popular as is Col. Lamont.

One would think the republicans ought to be satisfied with the result of the recent election. But they are not. Quay and Dudley, in the language of the street, "want the earth and all therein." They will attempt, through both state and federal courts, to change the result in Virginia. Ben. Butler and ex-Senator Henderson are said to have advised this course. Little "Billy Mahone" is happy over this determination on the part of Quay and Dudley. It will prevent, for a time at least, his return to the obscurity which he so richly deserves, and he also hopes to make this case a peg upon which to hang his expectation of future favors from the Harrison administration.

There is a new arrival at the house of Col. Lamont. It is a girl, and has been named Francis Folsom in honor of Mrs. Cleveland.

Mr. Cleveland has some very good army berths to dispose of as soon as he gets a chance to decide who shall have them. There are five appointments in the staff, all very desirable positions, also three cadets-at-large to send to West Point.

It seems that every republican Congressman who arrives here has a candidate for Harrison's Cabinet, and will be mad if his man is not selected. A little figuring will show how many mad men there will be in Congress when the Cabinet is announced.

It is said here that Senator Sherman believes that Governor Alger, of Michigan, prevented his getting the republican nomination for president, and that he is determined that Alger shall not go into Harrison's Cabinet if he can prevent it, and he thinks he can.

Another republican Senator who is not pleased with the outlook is Don Cameron. Quay has served notice on him that he shall not be allowed to control the federal patronage in Pennsylvania. That is a little job that Quay has reserved for himself. Senator Blair is also worrying for fear Harrison will oppose his Educational bill.
