

LEFT WITHOUT ARGUMENT.

Driven from the field of argument, logic and common sense, in their attempts to justify and maintain the false issues upon which Harrison was elected, the Oregonian and Mountaineer find it necessary to resort to misrepresentation of the most vicious sort. As the best and only argument which the Mountaineer could bring to rebut the Democrat's showing up of that paper's illogical and untenable position on the subject of "protection," it says: "Every evil that has befallen the United States since the government began its existence in, (the Democrat,) lays to the charge of protection." The Oregonian, rushing to the aid of its retreating protegee, says, substantially, that the Democrat charges all industrial evils and economic disturbances to the tariff policy of the country. Now, these charges against the Democrat are so utterly groundless and without color of truth to maintain them, that no words with less force than willful misrepresentation and pure fabrication would properly characterize them, and we pen these hard words in pity, not in anger. The Democrat quite frequently refers to the industrial evils and economic disturbances which come upon the country under republican rule, not for the purpose of showing that the tariff policy of the country necessarily brings those evils upon us, but for the purpose of showing that the boasted protection policy of the country cannot prevent their coming. As an example: It is a misfortune to the industrial interests of the country that strikes against a reduction of wages in large manufacturing establishments like Carnegie's should take place similar to the one now going on, whereby thousands of poor men with large families dependent upon them for bread and butter, should take place. We refer to this strike not as the result of the tariff policy of the country, but to show laboring men and misguided farmers that these strikes will occur in spite of this boasted "protection" policy of the country. In truth and in fact the most stupendous and far-reaching strikes that have ever occurred in the country have taken place under the highest rates of tariff that the country has ever had. During the late campaign republican leaders promised the people that if they would elect Harrison, good wages and constant employment should fall to the lot of workingmen, good home markets to our producers, ample, efficient mail service to the country, etc. They warned voters that if Cleveland should be elected the reverse of all these would be entailed upon the people. The Democrat refers to the reduction in wages that has taken place since the election, not as a necessary result of protection but to show up the unfulfilled promises and predictions of these republican leaders. The Mountaineer says the Democrat is wedded to free trade. The readers of the Democrat know this to be untrue, and will naturally and logically come to the conclusion that the Mountaineer must be driven to the wall and left without argument when compelled to resort to such silly misrepresentation. The Democrat has had in times past some reason to expect a more candid course from the Mountaineer. The most charitable view, however, to take of this foolish charge that the Democrat is wedded to free trade is that the Mountaineer really does not understand what free trade means. The Democrat has many reasons to believe it does not.

$1,087,466.55.

Look at the magnitude of these figures. It is difficult to comprehend their immensity, and yet this is the sum of money appropriated by the last legislature—the most extravagant one that ever convened in this state. At the close of the session the Democrat, as was its duty, charged that when the truth could be arrived at it would be found that the appropriations were larger than ever before in this state. This was denied by the Statesman and other papers, but we have carefully gone through the session laws and find the above to be the amount appropriated. This is two hundred thousand dollars more than was ever appropriated before. Let people put in their leisure hours between now and the next election studying the magnitude of these figures.

It is a noteworthy fact that the railway mail service is the worst that the country has had for years. Mail from the east is very irregular, and local mail is as uncertain as Iowa temperature. No department of the government was so completely overhauled and rid of democratic employees by this administration as this, and the result is that it is filled up with a miserable lot of incompetents who make the service a disgrace to the country. It is a common thing to see the words "missed" stamped on letters and other mail matter received by the people. This grows out of making the service purely partisan, without regard to the fitness of railway mail service employees.

HIS FOOT IN IT AGAIN.

There are several American manufactured articles which now compete with any in the world, and this is due to the fostering care of protection. An Eastern firm engaged in manufacturing office furniture has opened warehouses in London, and the cabinet makers of the English metropolis are in a flutter of surprise and apprehension because their new American competitor can offer a handsomer desk at a lower price than they can think of turning out a similar article for. A London paper, with strong protection leaning, calls attention to the new enterprise, and begs the free traders to consider how utterly out of gear is their argument, that protection increases the cost of production to such an extent as to forbid the manufacturers of a protective country from competing with those of a free trade land.—Mountaineer.

If an American article can be sold in London cheaper than a similar article manufactured there can, then why keep up the cry that removing the duty from that article would ruin our manufacturer. Your own admission is ample proof that this howl about ruining American industries is a sham and a delusion. What danger can there possibly be in the United States from English competition is the English manufacturer is in danger from an American competitor. The sham in your structure is becoming apparent every day.
