Judge Guthrie, of Topeka, Kansas, in charging a grand jury to make special inquiry as to the enforcement of the prohibitory law, emphatically endorses the law as follows: "For nearly five years there has not been a saloon, or any place where intoxicating liquors were openly sold or given away in this county. The law on this subject has been as strictly obeyed as the statute providing for the punishment of murder, robbery or larceny.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been invested here in this city by strangers, on the conviction that public sentiment favored an honest, fair enforcement of the law prohibiting the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, and it is believed that these conditions have induced thousands of families to change their homes in sister states to this city and state, so that they might with their children, escape the evil effects of the saloon.
