A GREATSHAM.

McKfnley's tariff committee in congress baet a part certain days in which to bear certain "special interests" discussed before it drafts its tariff bill. One day is set a part on which the committee will hear the iron interests, one wool, one woolen goods, one jute flax and hemp, and so on. If this were not so serious a matter, affecting the interests of sixty millions of people, it would be gretesquely humorons.

One iron manufacturer will undertake to tell the committee just how much duty should be placed upon imported manufactured iron, while the other sixty millions of people of the country who are also interested in this subject are practically excluded from the presence of the committee. The man who produces raw material and the manufacturer of iron can both be heard, but how about the great class of farmers and other consumers of iron goods? Will they be there? Will they be heard? In this land of ours, it was once thought that the true policy of a free government was the greatest good for the greatest number, but this prosection scheme reverses this great underlying principle of free government and lays down the policy of the greatest good for the least number and at the expense of the greater. Yes, this committee have set a part a day to hear suggestions on the jute question. Who will be there to advise with the committee as to the tax duty on jute? Will it be the dozen men in the United States who manufacture ute cloth, or the thousands and millions of farmers who use it? The policy of the greatest good to the least number will secure the atsendance of the dozen manufacturers, while the farmers will be absent, Why should there he a y question about removing the entire duty from raw jute and jute sacks? No jute Is raised in this country. Then why protect a dozen manufacturers by levying a heavy tax upon every farmer who used jute sacks? The wool growers will be heard long and loud and menacingly before the committee, but the poor man who labors hard with his shovel to day to pay for the woolen shirt he bought last week will never be heard of before that committee. The few hundred thousand men who raise wool will be fully represented before the committee, will be attentively listened to, and tenderly looked after, by McKinley, but the millions of poor cusses who consume wooler goods are as practically shut out from the resence of the committee as if thy had no existence. The great majority are alsolutely ignored while the favored few will be royarly treated by McKinley because they are protect tionists. The whole thing is the veriest mockery and an insult to the in elligence of every onsumer in the country. But light is breakng, and the time is not far distant when these plutocrats who thus ignore the rights of the masses for the benefit of the classes, will hide themselves in shame from the scorns of an

A Stage Robber Arrested.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 20 .- A man giving he name of Charlie Williams was arrested here this afternoon by detectives. He is believed to be the man who at different times during the past few weeks, has successfully robbed four stages in the northern part of Callfornia. The methods pursued in the robbery indicate that the robber in each case was identical. In his sudden flight after robbing the Redding stage last mouth he left a blanket behind him. A merchant here to-day identified Williams as the man to whom he sold the blanket.
