

The Philadelphia American, a very able republican paper, has the following to say of Delamater, the republican candidate for governor in Pennsylvania:

Mr Delamater comes, as we have said, to embody the Quay "vindication," to mark by his election the proclamation of a falsehood. He comes as a candidate made by private bargains with Mr Quay and others. He comes subject to the conditions of these bargains. He comes by means of the insolent and unfaithful course of the so-called "chairman" Andrews—a work which has prevented the party's preferences from having effect. He comes identified with private and corporate interests inimical to the commonwealth; he is sustained by them in the canvass now opening, and he must serve them as their agent if elected. He comes with the discredit of his record in the legislature—the only record he possesses—as one who there employed his abilities and gave his vote against important measures for the public good. And, lastly, he comes with charges affecting his character, openly and plainly and responsibly made, standing against him without a word of denial.

Of course Mr Delamater's candidacy will be unavailing. If he has the personal qualities which his friends attribute to him, he must see for himself the absurd and untenable position in which he stands. He cannot be endorsed by the people of the state except at the cost of their own honor. His candidacy is therefore impossible. Whether he retire now, as he ought to do, or remain in the field to be stamped with a humiliating defeat in November, it will be the same so far as his demand on the state is concerned. This is not a year for party servility and political cowardice to grant him an election.

This is a bad country for croakers. The man who always fancies the world is going to the dogs has no place in the United States. Even the mistakes of legislation are soon healed over by the inevitable growth and prosperity of this grand republic. The increase in population is steady, and the increase in production of wealth is beyond all precedent. Even the English statisticians now admit that the wealth of the United States in real and personal property surpasses that of Great Britain, but the latter country represents the accumulations of a thousand years, while the United States represents the business of one-quarter of that time, and, in fact, as a nation, only one-tenth of that period. There can be no doubt of a profitable field for enterprising and industrious manufacturers in the United States, while such elements of prosperity are prominent on all sides. It is a grand time to extend one's facilities, and to be able to meet the inevitable increase in the demand for standard goods.

The great point in favor of silver legislation of the character already outlined by congress is that it will facilitate the transaction of business by expanding the currency in proportion to the growth of the population and business of the country. With an increase in population of more than two millions per year, and with an increase in business even larger in percentage, it cannot be expected that the nation can transact its business with an inflexible currency, or one which is fixed beyond power of changing. The silver legislation proposed will give elasticity to the currency, and an increase when needed by the legitimate demands of business. A nation that is growing as rapidly as the United States demands an annual increase in the currency for transacting its legitimate business.

Some cooperative effort in the destruction of injurious insects is imperative in every rural neighborhood. One farmer or fruit grower, however active and intelligent, can accomplish but little working alone if his neighbors are indifferent. Insects do not confine themselves to one field or garden, but move about in a most tantalizing manner. Organize raids on these enemies of the farm and garden. Cooperate in destroying them. Work together for a common good and make thorough work of their destruction.

A metal has been produced that will melt at a temperature of 150 degrees. It is an alloy of lead, tin, bismuth and cadmium, and in weight, hardness and color resembles type metal. It melts so easily that, placed on a comparatively cool part of the stove with a piece of paper under it, it will melt without the paper being scorched.

An instrument has recently been exhibited in London by which a photograph can be taken of drops of water in the course of their formation. It consists of a lantern and lenses, by which a water trough, the source of the drops, can be strongly illuminated, together with a lightning camera having a revolving dish with one perforation.

The question in Pennsylvania this year is whether Matthew Quay can buy more votes for Delamater with the Standard Oil monopoly's money than the disgust of honest republicans can alienate from the smitiched candidate.

The democrats of Pennsylvania have nominated Ex-governor Pattison for governor and C M Black for lieutenant governor. This is a strong team.

The republicans in the house yesterday passed the infamous federal elections bill.
