

THE DAILY DEMOCRAT.

IT GETS LOST AGAIN.

We know of no paper that has so great a faculty for getting lost, in treating of the tariff question, as the Capital Journal published at Salem. It has been giving its reasons for favoring the McKinley bill. It says:

"The McKinley bill is a measure to revise the tariff as pledged by the republican national platform of 1888—to retain the protective feature for American industries and American labor and at the same time reduce the revenue."

But when sugar was put on the free list, was that retaining the "protective feature for American industries"? No, it was taking the only "protection" the south had except that on rice and iron. But, then, the south has no rights that republican leaders feel bound to respect, hence McKinley made an exception by putting raw sugar, (an article raised wholly in the south,) on the free list, while he retained or increased it on refined sugar, (manufactured in the north almost wholly.)

This alone stamps the bill as purely partisan and sectional. Can the Journal explain why the duty was removed entirely from raw sugar, (which is produced in large quantities in this country,) while it more than doubled it on tin, an article not manufactured in this country at all? Tin is a necessity of life. The rich, the poor, the old, the young, all alike have to use it. The whole thing is an outrage and people are fast finding it out. Again that paper says:

"We favor the bill because it seeks to place a check upon importations of agricultural products, now reaching annually to hundreds of millions, by increasing the duties on those articles of farm produce now shipped in from abroad in competition with the American farmer. The bill makes jute free and reduces the duty on cotton bagging. Sisal, manila and binder twine go on the free list. The wool duties are adjusted to suit the wool-growers and a duty will be placed on the nearly thirty million dollars worth of hides imported annually."

But the bill fails to check the importation of that agricultural product known as sugar, but as we said before this is an agricultural product raised in the south and from McKinley's stand point is not entitled to protection. "The bill makes jute free" says the Journal. That is to benefit the manufacturer, but there is quite an increase in the duty on jute sacks. McKinley has the very highest consideration for the manufacturer of jute sacks but none whatever for the farmer who has to use them in handling his grain. "The wool duties are adjusted to suit the wool-growers." Indeed! How considerate McKinley was of the interest of the half million people who are engaged in producing wool, and with what indifference did he treat the interests of the 65,000,000 who have to use wool products. The Journal seems to hold out the idea that no one should have any thing to say in fixing the amount of duty on wool except the wool-growers themselves. Shame on such partisan subsevlency. "Sisal, manila and binder twine go on the free list." We regret that the Journal should resort to misrepresentation in order to make a defense of the McKinley bill. The bill has this provision: "Binding twine one and one fourth cents per pound." And the senate has raised the twine duty to one and one half cents per pound. The Journal has deceived its readers about the twine duty. Will it now be candid enough to set them right on this point? The Journal says "the McKinley bill reduces the tariff."

Except sugar, the duty on nearly every important necessary of life has been increased. Take wool and all kinds of woolen goods—something that the poor as well as the rich must have and there has been a large increase in the duty. Every body with an ordinary memory remembers how the republicans complained that the Mills bill made but a slight reduction in woolen goods. But the Mills bill reduced the duty from 70 to 40 per cent while the McKinley bill increases it from 70 to an average of 90 per cent. The Journal makes much ado about the so-called protection for the farmers in the McKinley bill, but this "protection" has been shown time and again to be a fraud, deceit, a shame. Of what benefit is it to the American farmer to place a duty of 15 cents per bushel on corn or twenty cents per bushel on corn meal, or fifteen cents per bushel on buckwheat, and oats, or ten cents per bushel on rye, or twenty-five per cent ad valorem on wheat flour, or five cents per gallon on milk, or three cents each on cabbages, or forty cents per bushel on onions, or five cents per dozen on eggs, or twenty-five cents per bushel on apples, or five cents per pound on bacon, or two cents on beef, pork and mutton, or five cents per pound on dressed chickens? All of these articles are produced in this country as cheap or cheaper than in any other. Why, then this duty? Simply to make the unsophisticated farmer believe that he is protected equally with the manufacturers. But the farmers are day by day opening their eyes to the fact that this so-called protection for the farmer is all a delusion and a snare. The Journal must tell its readers, also, that hides are put on the free list by the McKinley bill.

Ex congressman S S Farwell of Iowa, on being asked by leading republicans of his district to stand as a candidate for congress, in declining to do so says: "I believe in the doctrine of protection, and the results of the protective policy it seems to me should fill the heart of every American with pride as he witnesses the growth of all the great manufacturing industries which have been fostered by it, but in many ways it has done its perfect work. It has fulfilled the conditions for which the policy was created, and to add to the high duties levied during the war an additional per cent, in these times of close competition and low wages is only giving the manufacturers opportunities to oppress the people by forming monopolies and trusts."
