

From our regular correspondent.) WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, July 21, 1890. Representative Lodge is a monomaniac on the subject of a federal election law. He wants, he says, "if necessary, a file of federal soldiers at every polling place in his district."

There is a great pressure at present republican circles, to have the Lodge pass. Of course, the actual reason is that millions have been given away through subsidies and tariff, public buildings and in many other extravagant ways, and it is admitted by those in authority that the U S Treasury is nearly bankrupted.

The statesmen here are, also, intensely excited as to the outcome of the census, and the new apportionment. They realize that the old northern states will scarcely hold their own in population, and that the growth of the country at large may even detract from them something of their present representation.

Pressure is being brought to bear on the five or six republican senators who are most determined in their opposition to the measure; and meanwhile the features of this bill are being considered by the senate committee on privileges and elections.

Representative Yoder, of Ohio, is a member of the democratic congressional committee, says that the democrats will gain several representatives at the coming election, as the result of the gerrymander of the state.

The other gains, which the committee is confident of making, are three in Missouri, one in Kentucky, two in Maryland, one each in Louisiana and Pennsylvania, and others possibly in Iowa and Massachusetts.

The senate is still discussing the sundry civil bill. A lively debate between senators Reagan of Texas and Stewart of Nevada, was one of the gleams of sunshine during this prolonged "deliberation."

The house to day, after an at times exceedingly lively debate, passed the "Original Package" bill, it having been decided by the republican managers that the passage of this bill was necessary to keep the prohibition republican voters in line at the coming congressional elections.

The next thing on the House republican programme is the national bankruptcy bill, which is to be railroaded in the usual Reed style; the House having by a party vote decided that the final vote should be taken on Wednesday. Think of passing a measure as sweeping in its effects as this one is, after only two days of alleged "deliberation."

The West Side says: "There is no doubt but that the colored vote is suppressed in the south."

This statement is so manifestly unjust and untruthful that we are surprised at the West Side for making it. There is no doubt that negroes vote just as freely and with as little molestation in Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Texas, Missouri, as democrats do in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Rhode Island, Maine and Vermont.

from that in the south that is all. The elections in Indiana and New York for president in 1888 were just as unfair as they ever were in South Carolina

We trust that the people of the country will bear in mind that the tariff problem is now in the hands of its friends. But candor compels the statement that the most deadly thrusts the tariff has ever received are those inflicted by McKinley and Blaine. But we believe these gentlemen, who are showing up the motive of those who promote protection, are doing a good work vigorously pushing along the campaign of education.
