

THE DAILY DEMOCRAT.

SOUND TALK.

Senator Plumb of Kansas is a very zealous republican, but he does not think that a man has to endorse, under the party lash, the protection vagaries of the McKinley bill in order to be a good republican. In making a speech the other day in opposition to that bill he said:

Then Plumb took a prominent part in the discussion inveighing against the exorbitant stands of the high protectionists. The American people were entitled to have cheap goods if competition could bring that about. When he asked, was the time coming when the people of the United States would get some benefit from the establishment of some industries? Just as fast as the point was arrived at when lower prices might be expected, the manufacturers came and said they wanted more duties, whereby the downward progress of prices might be checked. He had no idea that what he might say was going to affect the vote of the senate. He could conceive and he could now see that the cohorts of protection were so organized that the bill was to go through substantially as it came from the finance committee. He believed in distributing the duties necessary for the purpose of raising revenue for the support of the government in such a way as to equalize the conditions existing between the manufacturers of this country and those abroad. He was in doubt he would resolve the doubt in favor of the American manufacturers, but if he knew the exact conditions he would put the home and foreign manufacturer on the same footing practically. The senate, he continued, owed some duty to the American people as well as to the manufacturers.

WHAT THE FARMERS SEE.

The western farmers, studying over the McKinley bill in their intervals of toil, have been unable to see that it does anything for them. In the language of Mr. Blaine, "there is not a section or line in the entire bill that will open a market for another bushel of wheat or another barrel of pork." The farmer can see how certain prominent special interests will be helped, and more money be given to those who have much already, but they do not see that they are to sell more, get more for what they sell or pay less for what they buy. They were inclined at first to think they might get more for their wool, but they see its price does not go up a copper in spite of the headway the McKinley bill has made. With a prospect of higher duties their wool sells for four cents a pound less than last year.—Chicago Tribune.

The efficiency of the American mechanic is every where recognized as being superior to that of any other nationality. The French seem to come next in dexterity and activity in handling machinery, perhaps the English next, with the German the most plodding of all. There is no doubt that on iron-working machinery, for instance, or even in wood-working machinery the average American mechanic can do twenty-five per cent. more work than his German or English neighbor across the water. Thus we can always manufacture certain classes of goods as cheap or cheaper than they can be manufactured in Europe. One great incentive the American mechanic always has to achieve excellence in his work is that of becoming himself an expert workman, and finally a master mechanic, and owner of a shop, a forge or a factory. In Europe the average working-man has little or no ambition to become anything but a working man. His opportunities for becoming a master mechanic or the owner of a shop are so improbable that he works on in a plodding, mechanical way, doing the same to day as he did yesterday, and the same this year without making that progress which is inspired by the ambitions of the American mechanic. Our free institutions, our republican form of government, our equality between man and man, the wide field to rise in any of the departments, are among the factors which go to build up the enterprising mechanic and the prosperous manufacturer in this country.

That so farious a bloody shifter as Field Marshal Murat Halstead should now go back on the Force bill fills the soul of the Hon. Bill Chandler with grief and alarm. He had always regarded Halstead as a great leader, but now he brands him as an apostate. Halstead in reply, says that his apostasy consists merely in "hostility to false legislation," and as to the charge of abandoning the fifteenth amendment he says: "I do think the amendment unwise, but did not think so when it was proposed and had something to do with procuring its ratification by the State of Ohio, which was essential to its adoption. The amendment is right, but as a measure of reconstruction was not expedient, and I employ that exact language about the Lodge bill."

Nobody cares whether reciprocity is "the highest form of protection," as Secretary Blaine says, or the lowest form of free trade, so long as it opens new markets for the products of the United States and improves our industrial and commercial system.

WALL PAPER.—I have just received from the East a large invoice of wall paper, borders, decorations, etc., including the plain ingrains which are becoming very popular. These goods are better styles and cheaper than ever before.

J. N. HOFFMAN,
City Marshal

Senator Vest is entitled to the credit of exposing with the keenest ridicule the republican abandonment of the poor old home-market humbug. The protectionists have fooled the farmers to the top of their bent by promising them a home market if the single agriculturists would only contribute to the building up of the manufacturers. But a hundred years have passed and the farmer is still sending abroad the surplus which remains after the home market has taken all it can consume, and now the manufacturer themselves are asking for a wider market and are urging the making of reciprocity treaties. Here is a real free-trade victory in protection ranks the meaning of which no disclaimers can change.

Every voter in the South Carolina campaign makes frequent use of the phrase, "I say it regardless of consequences." That is the great trouble with the South Carolina campaign. There is too much disregard of the consequences.

The Ashland, Kansas, Champion a strong republican paper has come out boldly for "free trade." There is a great falling to pieces going on in the ranks of the republican party, just now. Let the falling to pieces go on. The work is a good one.
