

THE DAILY DEMOCRAT.

CRUMBLING.

That the Chinese wall of high tariff taxes is crumbling to the ground is proven by evidence on every hand. Blaine's scheme of reciprocity is simply one to side track republicans who are, in large numbers, deserting the sinking ship of high protection, and who, otherwise, would land in the democratic party. McKinley's bill to make sugar free and a high tariff on tin shows to the whole world that his bill is as purely sectional and partisan as it is possible to make it. Men of reason and intelligence every where are asking why sugar, which is produced in large quantities in this country, should not be protected, at least, equally with tin which is not produced here at all. These men reflect that the protection of sugar inures to the benefit of southern planters while the duty on tin will inure to the benefit of a few manufacturers in Pennsylvania who were squeezed of their "fat" in order to elect Harrison, and herein is the motive, spirit and animus of the McKinley bill. These same reasonable men come to the conclusion that the bill is unworthy the work of a statesman, a patriot, or even a man who prides himself on his fair dealing. No wonder, then, that republican papers, guided more by a desire to promote the public welfare than a wish to strengthen their party, should cry out against the monstrous known as the McKinley bill. We give some extracts below which will give our readers some idea of the rapidly growing tariff reform and reduction sentiment in the northwest. The St Paul Pioneer-Press the leading republican paper of the Northwest says:

Attending to tariff matters Senator Spooner incidentally calls attention to the fact that consumers have rights. Did this idea ever occur to one Napoleon Bonaparte McKinley? If so, how hard did it hit him?

Again it says: If there is in Washington any due appreciation of the state of feeling of the country at large, the senate, will conclude to drop both the Tariff and Lodge bills and go home. There is no demand or necessity for either of them. There is, in the republican ranks, a pronounced hostility to both which is not worth while to encounter. There is hardly a defender, outside of congress, except in a perfunctory way, for the Elections bill. The people understood that it would not accomplish the object sought by its framers. They have a lively sense of its inexpediency in other directions. And while they neither forget nor condone the outrage on law and justice which is perpetrated at the south, they are not prepared to endorse an ineffective and dangerous remedy. The case as to the tariff bill is even plainer. We cannot recall in recent political history any such general revolt against a measure brought forward in congress, and supported by all the power and prestige of party leaders, as that which the McKinley bill has had to encounter. It grows in unpopularity from day to day. Influential newspapers from one end of the west to the other, papers which are strictly loyal to party and devoted to its interests, are outspoken in their condemnation of this bill.

The Chicago Tribune, republican, says: The safe thing for the senate to do is to put the duty on tin-pla'e back at a cent a pound, to leave tin on the free list, and then let the Black Hills mines go ahead and show what they can do.

The Omaha Bee, republican, says: Eastern republican journals furiously denounce western republican senators for working and voting for reduced tariff, and threaten to read them out of the party. By what right have the champions of the McKinley bill become the keepers of the republican conscience? When it comes to reading republicans out of the party for opposing prohibitive duties the yeomanry of the west will be on hand and eastern autocrats may discover that the party leaders are not in position to bid defiance to public sentiment in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Minnesota.

These show a revolt among the republicans of the northwest against high tariff taxes that menace the very power of the party. Will the leaders of that party in congress heed the protest? We think not.

The Times-Mountainier defends the large and extravagant appropriations made by congress, (by which the full treasury turned over under Cleveland, has been practically depleted under Harrison,) on the ground that it sees "no reason for the government's boarding millions in the vaults of the treasury while the poor of the country are suffering deprivations for want of work. Sending this money in circulation is a benefit to the country." Very well, if it be a benefit to have this money in circulation why not remedy the evil of an over running treasury by reducing the robber taxes which the poor are compelled to pay when the money is not needed at all. Reduce the robber tariff duties on the necessities of life, such as wool, woolen goods, sugar, iron, salt, coal, lumber etc. until the duties collected will not much exceed the revenue necessary to meet the demands of the government economically administered. This is the true remedy as contradistinguished from the miserable make-shift suggested and endorsed by the Mountainier.

Senators Fry and Hale have both come out flat footed for Blaine's reciprocity scheme. If the senate should make this scheme a part of the tariff bill, then when the bill goes back to the house for concurrence McKinley Reed & Co will make the wool fly. It will be the supreme effort of their lives to bury Blaine's scheme, and with it Blaine, out of sight. The fight will be a highly-entertaining one—to democrats.

McKINLEY'S UNDERWEAR.—In great variety of styles at bottom prices. Samuel E. Young.

As we have said before, republicans are the real obstructionists in the senate. Yesterday in that body Senator Aldrich asked unanimous consent to fix September 8th as the day for a final vote on the tariff bill. To this democrats raised no objection, but Plumb of Kansas, one of the ablest republicans in the senate, objected and the motion had to go over. The truth is that Plumb has very decided views in favor of reducing the tariff and wants ample time to discuss the question of reduction. He sees that the farming classes of the west and north-west are alive with enthusiasm in favor of material tariff reduction and he wants time to reflect their views. He is a conscientious man.
