

PROSPECTS OF THE HOISERY TRADE.

The Albany Evening Journal published last week a vociferous dispatch from one of the hosiery manufacturing towns explaining how the McKinley tariff was going to boom business.

But the dispatch was candid enough to admit two drawbacks to this beautiful picture. The new tariff law protected other people besides the manufacturers, and to this extent deprived the Amsterdam people of the protective profits they were feasting their eyes on.

Of course, there is some force in this argument, but it is subject to certain qualifications which the Albany Evening Journal and its hosiery correspondent do not notice. We are confident that every man who has kept a store, whether a little country variety store or a great metropolitan emporium, will appreciate the force of it.

The politician may laugh at it, but the merchant knows very well that a decrease in price expands sales, and an increase of price restricts them.

If the price of woolen goods advance the demand for them will fall off, and if the demand for woolen diminishes, the demand for wool will diminish.
