

POLITICAL FORESIGHT.

The following dispatch shows Blaine's political foresight:

Senator Joe Blackburn, after many weeks of secrecy, tells an intensely interesting story about Blaine and his wonderful political foresight. It is the talk of Washington, and Blaine is complimented on every hand for his marvelous political sagacity. Senator Blackburn returned yesterday from Kentucky, and in speaking about the election results to several correspondents, said:

Out of the general wreck arises a solitary figure alone, but conspicuous. That figure is Mr. Blaine. Always towering, he now appears peerless in preeminence. He alone emerges from the crush of disaster unhurt. To him his party will turn as the only Moses or Joshua that can lead it out from the mire of defeat to solid ground where a footing may yet be gained, and now, that it is all over, I will tell you of a scene I witnessed in which Mr. Blaine was the principal actor, a scene, that, to me, was so full of intensity as to be almost dramatic, and which will never fade from my memory. It has never been told before. The McKinley bill had been passed by the house and was on the calendar in the senate, though it had not yet been taken up. It was a particularly warm day in July when Senators Allison, Hale and myself sat in the senate appropriation committee room waiting for Mr. Blaine, whom we were to consult as a sub-committee about the consular and diplomatic budget. There was no one else present except the clerk of the committee. Blaine finally appeared, and with him, Curtis, the accomplished secretary of the Pan-American congress. The secretary was rather in negligee costume, as suited the temperature, except as to a particularly glossy and irreproachable silk hat, a brand new, shining plug. The tariff bill, mind you, had nothing to do with the subject in hand, but in a casual way I broached it after the usual greetings had been exchanged. Probably I asked Mr. Blaine how he liked it. Imagine my surprise, and shall I say gratification, when he launched forth a torrent of invectives against the act that McKinley fathered. He said:

"This bill is an infamy and an outrage. It is the most shameful measure ever proposed to a civilized people. Go on with it and it will carry our party to perdition."

I was feeling considerably interested, and said:

"I wish you were in the senate, Mr. Blaine, to announce yourself in such terms." "I wish I were," he answered. "If so, I would stamp it under my feet and spit upon it."

Then advancing toward Senators Allison and Hale he snapped his fingers in the face of each alternately, and with rising indignation said:

"Go on with your drivelling idiocy and see to what destruction it will lead the republican party. Pass this bill and in 1892 there will not be a man in all the party so beggared as to accept your nomination for the presidency."

Then he began to dissect the bill, particularly the sugar schedule. This he inveighed against with all his force. I reminded him that the senate had improved upon the labors of the house as regarded sugar; that to protect an American industry involving the enormous labor of boring a hole in a maple tree and boiling the juice, the senate had agreed to give the maple sugar-growers of New England a bounty of 2 cents. That was the first he had heard of it and he seemed hardly able to credit what I told him.

"It is not true," he said. Allison and Hale confirmed me.

"I suppose this was done at the solicitation of Morrill and Edmunds," he inquired.

Mr. Allison replied in the affirmative. "It is a good sample of the breadth of their statesmanship," said the secretary, and then the climax came. His new beaver was lying on the table within easy reach. With a sudden blow he brought his clenched hand down on it with such force as to mash it flatter than pancake, and then seizing the battered chapeau he hurled it against the wall violently. I never saw an ebullition, but it only emphasized the deep earnestness with which the secretary argued against the policy, about which his opinion as then given now seems prophetic."

"Will he be the republican nominee of 1892?" was asked of Senator Blackburn.

"Certainly; from now on no other man will be thought of, and henceforth you will see a still wilder divergence on his part from the course of the Harrison administration."

THE largest amount of joy over the late election seems to be located within the limit of England. The British free trader reckons the results as a direct victory for himself.—Herald. The largest amount of joy observed by the DEMOCRAT is within the limits of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas and other republican states where its voters have grown sick of protectionism and have determined to wear the yoke no longer.

THE GOLDEN RULE BAZAAR.

Has now a complete line of Holiday goods, dolls, doll buggies, boys' wagons, velocipedes, and many other goods which go to make up a complete line for Christmas, besides a complete line of lamps of every description. China crockery, fancy decorated ware, glassware, bird cages, plush goods, such as albums, toilet sets, autograph books, scrap books, children's A B C picture books, and all goods that are carried in a Bazaar store, including Roger Bros. 1847 silverware. We wish to call the attention of the public in particular to the Golden Rule prize baking powder and tea, put up expressly for this trade, which gives the best of satisfaction, as is attested by the hundreds who have used both the tea and baking powder ever since introduced by the Golden Rule Bazaar. Each package of tea and can of baking powder draws a prize in the shape of a fine piece of glassware. Be sure to call, when in Albany, at the Golden Rule Bazaar, as you will be sure to find what you want, and will be shown over the store and be treated kindly by my clerk, Mr. Miller. My goods are all marked in plain figures so as not to deceive anyone, and I have but one price to all.

Yours truly,

JULIUS GRADWOLD,
