MISCELLANEOUS.

The DEMOCRAT is told of a couple of children who were recently cured of diphtheria by the use of coal oil.

Our contemporary says Ingalls talks like a chronic dyspeptic, which just about hits all the talking the famous Senator ever did.

L. M. Sloper has sued the stockholders of a Natural Gas company formed in Benton county last year, for $275 for work performed in sinking a well 200 feet after the gas. It will be contested and promises to be a gay affair.

Eugene City is being boomed in the Oregonian after the fashion of Anacortes last year. At least there are indications that way. Eugene, though, has a fine start and first-class surroundings to back her, and is now displaying considerable enterprise.

A stroll about the city brings to light some remarkable feats of misspelling on the part of the sign painters. One sign makes this bold announcement: "No vehicles allowed to stand in front of this block." It is cruelly to wagons to make them stand in a whisper. On a vacant lot a placard announces "This place for sale." As the lot is high and dry the reference to sailing is unjust. A scrawled sign tacked onto a barn near Salem contains this information: "A mail call cheap." This perhaps had no reference to the postoffice. But the Chinamen are the boys to get up queer signs. They are certainly a mixture. One near the postoffice speaks in this wise: "Job any kind employ." One of the old signs of last year was this, posted at a hop yard gate: "Hist price for hop pickers."—Salem Statesman.
