

DIGGING INTO ANCIENT GRAVES.

If there is any one thing above another which the editor of the Oregonian delights to do, it is that of discrediting the worth and merit of the influence of dead democrats.

"Jefferson rendered the country a good deal of real service, and did it an infinite deal of harm." His merit as author of the declaration of independence has been much exaggerated.

It is a well-authenticated historical fact that Jefferson was the author of the Declaration of Independence, though federalists and those who wanted and continue to want to set up a strong government modeled after the form of that of Great Britain have attempted to deny it.

Those who favor a centralized government have always antagonized Jefferson and the great principles of constitutional liberty as expounded by him. These centralizationists want a centralized government in order that they may divest the people of their right to regulate their own domestic affairs in their own way.

For this reason they seek to discredit Jefferson. The Oregonian would deprive Jefferson of the credit due him as author of the declaration of independence by saying that "the voice of the colonies would have found expression had Jefferson not existed and very probably in clearer style and better form."

The real difference between the doctrines of Jefferson and Hamilton was, and is that the former believed that the government should be in the hands of the masses of the people while the latter would have made a government of aristocrats.

We can now see to what these assumptions lead. Where Hamilton imposed tariff duties of 5 to 10 per cent, the modern federalists have raised them to 50 and 100 per cent, and more, until the favored classes are rich enough to buy elections and own both the legislature and the executive.

Such are the nature and necessary fruits of federalism—of loose construction—that is, of giving the administration its own head, instead of requiring it to follow the letter of the charter.

integrity and legislative and administrative morality are the necessary outgrowth of Jeffersonian principles.

In the Rhode Island election held last week Davis, the democratic candidate for governor, received 22,249 votes, Ladd the republican 20,995, Larry prohibitionist 1828 and Burton nationalist 384.
