A part of Salem was left out, by mis-take, under the city's new charter, which generally enlarges the limits Now the question arises whether the locality would not remain in the city under the old charter, some claiming it not to be repealed so far as that part is concerned. It is probable the locality referred to, which is in North Salem, cannot be in-cluded until the charter is again amended. amended.

In refusing to make an appropriation for the World's fair the Oregon Legislature did more to injure this state than can be overcome in several years by the greatest enterprise that can be displayed. It will make the world believe we really are a people of mossbacks, and that there is a fungus growth along our spinal columns. Hereafter the people of this state should see that animated beings are elected to the Legislature and not inorganic beings. All of the U. S. but Texas and Arkansas are pointing their fingers at us.

Peter the Poet, editor of the Klamath Star, dishes up the stone man as follows: Smart Eugene folks lately put forth their best efforts to fool the old fossils of that region, but failed. They chiseled out a stone man, gave the face a fine touch expressive of the ignorance and prejudice of the "treasury watch dog," carted it to a lonely dell and subsequently dug it up and presented it as a cave-dweller. But some of the organic remains of the last legislature examined it and pronounced it a fraud. It was too symmetrical and modern looking, and it had no moss on its back
