FEDERAL AND STATE SUPREMACY

The supreme court of the United States has just handed down an important decision timely in more ways than one, because it distinctly defines the line which separates federal from state supremacy. It is sound democratic doctrine, and for aught critics of the American Federation as well as domestic opponents who are unconsciously centralizers will both be profited by reading it.

A writ of error carried a Texas murder case into the United States supreme court. It was claimed that the penal code of criminal procedure in the state of Texas was not properly enacted under the constitution of Texas; that error was introduced in the trial by defects in the indictment, by the admission of improper evidence and by alleged disqualification of a juror. Chief Justice Fuller, who delivers the finding of the federal court, asserts as the fundamental law by which all such appeals must be determined that the state courts of Texas alone can determine whether state statutes are in accord with the state constitution, that to give the United States supreme court jurisdiction to review a state court because of the denial by the state court of any right, title, privilege or immunity claimed under the constitution, or any treaty or statute of the United States, it must appear on the record that such title, right, privilege or immunity was specifically set up and claimed at the proper time and in the proper way; that the decision of the state courts as to what are the state laws is binding upon the federal courts, and that the federal court cannot inquire into the validity of the Texas code. This excludes from the consideration of the federal court all questions presented to it in the appeal.

This decision, although directed at a given cause, is general in effect and unchangeable in principle. The constitution of the United States distinctly asserts the supremacy of the state in all its own affairs; in all affairs not involving the United States, and defines the jurisdiction of the United States when its authority is involved. It cannot be too often asserted for the benefit of foreigners and centralizers that this is a federation of sovereign states.

A FINE ATLAS.—Mrs Tall, of this city, has shown us the latest revised edition of Cram's Atlas for which she is now canvassing. This is a book of 238 pages. Among the new features are 31 maps of the 31 principal cities of the U. S. The maps of the several states and foreign countries are enlarged and perfected. A brief history of political parties since the formation of the government. The statistical tables alone are worth the price of the book. Here we have an outline of the life of each president, date of election, time of service, with date and place of birth and death, important inventions, exemption laws, interest laws, religious denominations, railroad mileage, highest mountains, longest rivers and many other tables too numerous to mention. Taken altogether it is a most valuable publication and should be in the hands of every family.

A notable display of the products of American industry at the recent Protective Tariff League banquet was the glassware and crockery. The glasses from which the guests drank their wine, the dishes from which they ate their fish, roasts, vegetables, etc, were all of American manufacture. Yet while the League was festively celebrating these proofs of the blessedness of the tariff, the putters of New Jersey were on strike against a reduction of 22 per cent in their wages.
