

AN EXTRA SESSION NECESSARY.

Senator Crisp strongly favors an extra session in March.

It need not last long, he thinks, or undertake any but preparatory work.

The House, as the Speaker points out, should be organized at that time. A committee of ways and means should be appointed to consider and prepare a judicious tariff-reform bill for submission and passage during the succeeding autumn.

The Democratic party is charged with the duty of reforming the tariff. It must not unduly delay the work. Still less must it do the work with such hurry as shall exclude deliberation and involve danger of blundering. The task is one of extreme delicacy which requires circumspection at every step.

If there is no extra session this work cannot be begun till the beginning of 1894. A bill could hardly be perfected and passed before the late spring, and it would be unsafe and unfair to business interests to give effect to a new tariff without adequate notice.

If there is no extra session the new tariff cannot go into effect before September or October, 1894. On the eve of a Congressional election it would certainly be misrepresented, and misrepresentation might be the means of defeating the Democracy in the year.

But if there is an extra session in March for organization, the work of preparing a tariff bill can be begun at once by the Ways and Means Committee, and carried on deliberately during the summer, with the advice of such men as Carlisle and Mills in the Senate and other Democratic statesmen and business men whose counsel is of value.

Upon the meeting of Congress again in the fall the work of the session, so far as this most important measure is concerned, would be fully laid out. The tariff bill could be passed early in 1894, and go into effect in the spring or early summer, thus giving time for its benefits to appear before the people shall be called upon to judge of its wisdom.

An extra session will hasten the work without hurrying it. It will prove Democratic good faith and commend the Democracy anew to popular favor. It will bring relief to the people many months sooner than would otherwise be possible. It will give to business of every kind the notice it needs of the changes to be made in business conditions.

With such a plain warrant from the people it is no time for the Democratic party to shirk its duty or to delay unnecessarily the fulfillment of its promises.

The republicans in each of the states of Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana and California are trying to count in enough of their legislative candidates who were not elected to enable them to elect senators in these states. This method practiced so extensively by certain republican leaders has done more than anything else to bring the party into disfavor except it be the force bill and protectionism. The democrats and populists in these states should meet these purloiners of senators with that heroic resistance necessary to defeat the theft.

Taking all things into consideration, there is no doubt that the monetary conference has a hard problem to solve, but it will be a lasting shame if the monetary metallists in their selfish and nearsighted policy prevent the recommendation of substantial advance in the financial methods of the world. The people, not the magnates, want the change; the sufferers, not the beneficiaries, of the present situation.—Telegram.

The secretary of state at Sacramento has received official returns from all but two counties. The returns thus far received show that between 7,000 and 10,000 voters in the state refused or neglected to vote for any presidential electors. Thirty thousand voters in the state failed to vote for any candidate for congress.

It is rather amusing to find a long census report on tin in the United States which starts out with the frank confession that tin-mining in this country has not yet produced any commercial tin.

Congress met in regular session to day. The country is somewhat curious to know what President Harrison will say of the force bill, tariff and kindred subjects.

The West Side is indulging in volumes of ancient history about "protection." Wake up Bro Penland out of that Rip Van Winkle sleep and join the procession.

John Lavery has good reasons to regret his imprudence in returning to Oregon to visit his brother living in Malheur county. Six years ago while living in Baker City he was indicted by the grand jury for issuing a challenge to fight a duel, and pending trial he got several friends to furnish $500 each bail for him and then skipped. Recently he returned, thinking that the case against him was barred by the statute of limitations, but it was not, and he will now be tried at the present term of the circuit court in Baker City. He is now in jail, as no one seems inclined to try the experiment of his former bondsmen.—Ex.

If H Miller the defeated republican candidate for presidential elector has commenced mandamus proceedings before Judge Burnett of the Circuit Court against the Secretary of state to restrain that officer from counting the vote cast for Nathan Pierce in those counties where Pierce's name was printed twice on the ballot. The case will be decided by Judge Burnett at once, when, whatever the decision may be, the case will be appealed to the Supreme for final judicial determination. Of course the decision will in no wise affect the presidential contest and the decision will be accepted by all as coming from a court entirely uninfluenced by party feeling.

There are strutting on our streets healthy, hale and hearty men, well able to earn a living, who are pensioners upon the generosity of the people of this country. Several of these men never saw a battle, and secured what the Government agreed to give them for their services when they enlisted. They have no claim on the bounty of the taxpayer any more than another citizen who is able to work and earn his living.—Portland Dispatch.

The frantic appeals made by the Statesman to the republican voters of that town to vote the straight party ticket at the city election would lead one to infer that the force bill, the McKinley bill, Bill McKinley or some other noted "bill" was in peril.
