WASHINGTON LETTER.
From our regular Correspondent.
Washington, July 3, 1893.

President Cleveland never did a more universally popular thing than when he issued his proclamation calling an extra session of congress to meet August 7, it being generally conceded by everybody that the financial situation demands congressional legislation, although, of course, there is a difference of opinion as to the exact nature of what that legislation ought to be. It is well known that in calling the extra session for August instead of September as originally intended, the president deferred to public opinion as represented by prominent individuals and business organizations in every section. They stated to him that in their judgment an early extra session would have a tendency to restore public confidence and improve the financial situation, and although it greatly inconvenienced him personally and doubtless many of the senators and representatives who had made their arrangements for September, he yielded, and a good effect is already perceptible.

Now that the extra session has been called, the question naturally arises, what will it do? Mr Cleveland states in his proclamation that "The present perilous condition largely the result of a financial policy which the executive branch of the government finds embodied in unwise laws which must be executed until repealed by congress," and it would seem that both house and senate being democratic there should be no difficulty in having those unwise laws repealed at the request of a democratic administration, particularly when the fact is remembered that the Chicago platform upon which the democratic party carried the country by an overwhelming majority, denounced those laws and demanded their repeal; but there is a difficulty and a doubt, although it is growing less substantial, as to the repeal of the Sherman silver law.

The absence of Mr Cleveland, who does not expect to return to Washington until just before the extra session meets, and the reticence of the members of the cabinet, most of whom expect to take their vacations between this time and August 7, indicates that having done its duty the administration proposes now to keep its hands off and let congress do its duty, believing that the business interests of the country will make its influence sufficiently felt in congress to make the repeal of the Sherman law a certainty. A personal friend of the president said this morning: "I do not believe that Mr Cleveland will have another word to say publicly on this question until he sends his message to congress, which I mistake not will be a convincing document."

Senator Voorhees, chairman of the state committee on finance, who has always voted for the free coinage of silver, is strongly in favor of the repeal of the Sherman law and expresses the belief that it will be repealed. The senator is always a power in congress and his aid will unquestionably be valuable in the senate, where the strongest opposition to the repeal will be met. It seems to be settled in the minds of those who have been studying the question that the house will vote for repeal by a majority of not less than 20, although it may take good leadership and some hard fighting to put it to a vote.

In view of the probability of a prolonged fight in which the whole silver question would be thoroughly stirred up, and its probable bad effect on financial affairs, the suggestion has been made that it would be good policy for the extra session to pass a resolution authorizing the president to suspend the purchase of silver under the Sherman law and then at once adjourn. It is claimed by the advocates of this plan that it would demonstrate before the opening of the regular session of congress whether the purchase of silver was as largely responsible for the financial stringency as it claimed to be and would enable congress to legislate upon the subject with more intelligence. On the other hand, there are numbers of democrats who say the party is pledged to give the country financial and tariff reform and that the work should begin with the extra session and not end until it has been thoroughly completed.

The canvas for the officers of the house will necessarily have to be short. Speaker Crisp will be re-elected without opposition, and Clerk Kerr is so far the only candidate for his position. In addition to the incumbents—S S Yoder, of Ohio; Charles H Turner, of New York, and Lycurgus Dalton, of Indiana—there are a number of gentlemen who would like to be sergeant-at-arms, doorkeeper and post master, and the probabilities are that they will make a very lively campaign with the chances slightly in favor of the old officials.

And now comes a minister of the gospel, a populist, and declares most solemnly that no man can be a christian who votes the democratic or the republican ticket. There is no greater object of pity in the whole state than this demoted minister.

If the management of the state penitentiary is as bad and corrupt as made out by the Independent, then there is but one course left for the governor to pursue. He should at once remove him. It is all right to have a democrat for superintendent but he must be honest, careful and vigilant. But we do not condemn Mr. Downing. We prefer to hear his defense to the charges thus brought against him. Let him reply.

The Populist who can't give Cleveland pointers on the financial condition of this country and concoct a salve warranted to cure this monetary eruption, will please address Kohl & Middleton, Chicago, Illinois. These gentlemen own eight dime museums, and are thoroughly responsible.—Welcome.

A number of farmers have been consulted who tell us the crops will be excellent. Hay much more than an average crop. Fruit except prunes not good.

The greatest vital question of the day is "What will congress do about the money question."
