A WIND BAG PUNCTURED

For an oily dodger commend us to the tariff editor of the Times Mountaineer. Senator Dolph has introduced a bill providing that machinery for the Oregon jute mill shall be admitted free of duty. The Corvallis Times calls the attention of the arctic senator to the fact that Mr. Dolph and his party have repeatedly proclaimed from the stump that placing a duty upon an imported article does not affect the consumer for, as they say, the foreigner pays the duty. The Times in its unsophisticated way wants to know what Dolph is driving at when he asks that such machinery be admitted free. Why does he want to relieve these bloody foreign Britishers from paying this duty? McKinley is on the stump today in Ohio proclaiming that the foreigner pays the duty. What seductive influence has been brought to bear upon our senior senator to induce him to thus legislate in the interest of Great Britain? British gold? Perish the thought; and yet, — But let us look into what the Mountaineer says:

This jute factory at Salem is a state institution, and will not compete with any department of labor. It is experimental as a means to furnish labor for convicts, whereby the state may be reimbursed for expenses incurred in their keeping. Under such circumstances, the machinery for the mill would be considered differently than if it were to be used in a private enterprise and for the benefit of an individual or corporation. It would be a manifest injustice to apply the same rule to both these instances, and protection aims to deal fairly with all industries and those who are engaged in operating them.

But the state must be indifferent about the removal of the duty if the foreigner pays it. And then placing a duty on an imported article does not increase its price, say these protectionists, hence its of no benefit to the state to remove it. According to the Mountaineer's theory no one can be benefited by removing the duty except the foreigner. We leave the Mountaineer to tell its readers why it is laboring in the interest of British manufactures.

TWO PLEDGES REDEEMED

The democrats in the lower house of congress have redeemed two pledges made in the last presidential campaign. They very promptly repealed the Sherman law and the federal force election laws. The bill to repeal the election laws passed the house yesterday by the large vote of 200 to 101. Now let the senate promptly repeal the Sherman law for it stands in the way of a larger and safer use of silver, and the election laws for they stand in the way of a free expression of the public will.

Some of the shallow and callow republican organs throughout the country keep up the campaign pretense that the business depression is due to the result of the last election. Are not tariff and other taxes just as high as the republicans left them? Is not the treasury still suffering from the republican deficiency? Is not the gold reserve just about as "Calico Charlie" left it? Are not compulsory silver purchases still going on under a law passed by exclusively republican votes and signed by a republican president? What has changed except the incumbency of the higher offices and the purpose of the government in relation to the wrongs and the evils which the people condemned? Too many partisan journals are conducted on the theory that the people are fools.

Peffer the populist senator from Kansas has introduced, by request, a bill providing for the coinage of all the gold and silver in the treasury and all that will be offered and for issuing enough paper money to bring the volume of currency to $5,000,000,000. Of this $5,000,000,000 will be distributed to the states and territories pro rata, according to population, to be expended in public improvements. The bill further provides that all citizens of the United States offering their labor will be employed under conditions of the bill. Peffer said he did not consider the country ripe for such legislation yet.

Bismarck collects thermometers for amusement as other men collect coins or stamps or canes. Hardly a window in his house is without one, and altogether he has fully thirty of improved make about the place. The prince has a great fondness for the dumb creation. In the forest about his castle there are many squirrel boxes and bird houses, the occupants of which have been so well treated that they come down the trees to receive the caresses of visitors.

It has been discovered that the holes often observed to appear in marble which has remained for a period in sea water are caused by an insect.

CLOSURE FOR THE SENATE.

It is practicable to adopt a rule that will enable the majority of the Senate to bring any matter before that body to a vote without infringing at all on the proper rights of the minority.

Senator Hill has proposed such a rule. It provides that after any subject has been under debate for thirty days in the aggregate, meaning of course legislative days, a motion shall be in order to fix a date for a vote, and this motion shall be put to vote without amendment or debate.

That is fair and even liberal to any minority. Thirty days of debate is sufficient to enable it to be determined at least when debate may properly end. The date fixed may be an early one or a later one. It is unlikely that any reasonable request of the minority for additional time would be ignored, but the majority could require the minority to say definitely how much time it desired.

Mr Voorhees has several times during the current debate asked the minority to indicate how much time would satisfy it. The reply has always been a refusal to do so. The minority desires infinite duration of the debate. But this is a finite world, and the attitude of the minority in this case is that of senatorial insolence, not of senatorial courtesy.

Senators may not be conscious of the injury they are doing to the dignity of their body by suffering its impotence to be so glaringly exposed. This damage will be irreparable unless they take measures to end the farce and prevent the possibility of any similar occurrence in future. The contempt into which the senate as a house of congress is falling will extend to the highest senators. A legislative body that confesses it cannot legislate will not long escape radical change in this practical nation.

An English journal notes that a Bristol firm has been using a bond saw forty-seven feet long, since 1870, the deepest cut being seven feet, through oak.
