UNSAFE TO DEPEND ON ONE CROP ALONE

Expert Points Out That South Is Paying the Penalty.

Washington — "The situation in which the cotton planters now find themselves is only an illustration of the danger attendant upon any farm enterprise and business based on raising a single crop," said Professor Spillman, chief of the office of farm management. "It may run along very well for awhile, even for many years, but some disaster will undoubtedly overtake it. Our study and investigation have simply demonstrated that it is never safe to build agriculture on any one thing."

"The wheat growers of the Pacific northwest had no better resource than wheat. In 1883 the crop was ruined by untimely rains. In 1884 they experienced the panic, and the price of wheat fell as low as 18 cents per bushel. The next year it rose to 25 cents a bushel and in 1886 was boosted up to 35 cents. During that period nearly every bank and every commercial house in that region went broke. So many mortgages were called on farms that the price of farm land, which had been $40 to $50 per acre, fell as low as $10 and $12. The Pacific northwest for years past has not been depending on wheat alone. The farmers learned a costly lesson."

"The same thing is true of the rice producers in regions where no other crops were raised in large quantities. Farmers who grew nothing but rice have met with two or three eras of prices away below the cost of production, and financial ruin has followed."

"Every region that has but one great agricultural enterprise has suffered more or less the same way."

"The evident thing that the south must do is to produce enough of all the things her wonderfully rich soil can produce to meet her home requirements. That is what the office of farm management has been urging on the south."

Advices People to Stay in Cellars. London—The mayor of Gravesend, the gate of London, has warned the people against trying to gratify their curiosity in the event of a raid by Zeppelins. "When firing is heard," he says, "take to the lower rooms or cellars."
