CITY OF MALINES IS DEAD AFTER A BATTLE

Only 14 of Its 60,000 Inhabitants Found by Visitor.

Copenhagen.—Fourteen stricken human beings, running and crouching in the shadows of an autumn evening, and one dog, howling amid the ruins of his master's house, were the only life left in Malines when the Germans swept through it a few days ago. The dead cathedral city was peopled by these few terrified ghosts—all that were left of Malines' 60,000 inhabitants, who fled as soon as they saw the first uhlan galloping along the road from Brussels.

A German writer has just visited the stricken city. St. Rombold's gothic cathedral and other parts of the town have received a few more shattering blows since the Germans passed through it. The last onslaught on Antwerp had wrought a miracle in Malines. Every door was open—at least those of the houses which were left standing—a clean white cloth was on nearly every table, and there were fruit and wine in plenty. The shops were open, and children's playthings were strewn about the pavements and in the gardens exactly as they had been left. Now and then a German soldier crossed near the wool market in the Place d'Erasmus and joined more soldiers working on the railway.

Thousands of Germans passed through Malines; hundreds of evening meals had been prepared, but not a bottle of wine was touched. In the suburb of Muesen the door of a watch and silversmith's shop stood open, and there were neatly displayed rows of gold and silver watches, bracelets and women's trinkets untouched. Under the shadow of the cathedral stood the restaurant of the Golden Fleece, with tables spread and viands and wines untouched. Had the dreams of Hauptmann come true? asked the writer. What miracle had been performed in this silent city? What unseen hand was at the helm of the empty boats that drifted down the river Dyle? What fear had killed "even the little yellow singing birds of humanity," as he called the canaries that were lying dead at the bottom of their cages?

COW'S "BABY DEAR" A DEER.

Adopted Motherless Fawn Got Milk Farmer Missed.

Greensburg, Pa.—Following a Jersey cow which had developed a habit of disappearing every morning and coming home in the evening without her usual supply of milk, James Wilson, whose farm adjoins the state game preserve near Ligonier, discovered that the cow is raising a motherless fawn.

Wilson was surprised to see a pretty fawn come from among the underbrush and start to nurse at the cow's side. Bossy seems well pleased with her charge, and the fawn shows affection for the cow. Kintner B. Rodgers, game protector, found the mother of the fawn dead. He has arranged with Wilson to permit the cow to raise the baby deer.

BLOW RESTORES HER SIGHT.

Mother Can See After Son Swats Fly on Her Face.

Denver.—Mrs. Frank Paxton of Arden, a Denver suburb, recently for the first time saw her husband and her eight-year-old son. For the first time since she was seven years old she is able to distinguish objects of any kind by the eye.

The recovery of her vision she considers almost a miracle.

Nine years ago she married Paxton, a mining engineer. She had just graduated from the State School for the Blind at Colorado Springs. A fly lit on her face, and her little son tried to knock it off with a newspaper, the corner of which struck her left temple. Almost immediately she screamed: "I must be dying! I can see!"

Now the vision of her left eye is virtually normal. Six months ago physicians who treated her declared she never could regain her sight.

MARIE DRESSLER PLEASES CROWDS AT GLOBE THEATER

One continuous laugh from start to finish. That was the effect produced by "Tillie's Punctured Romance," on the crowd which attended the first production of the premier Keystone comedy at the Globe yesterday. The theater could have accommodated more people, but those who were on hand appreciated the production to the utmost.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance" is in six reels and the best of dramatic talent has been used in making the film. Marie Dressler, taking the title role of Tillie, lives up to her reputation as the queen of American comedy, and appears all the more ludicrous because of the presence of dainty Mable Normand.

A majority of the movie plays coming to Albany, arrive here from two to three weeks after they have been shown in Portland, but "Tillie's Punctured Romance," was secured by Manager George Rolfe, immediately after it had finished a two weeks' run in Portland. The photoplay will be shown here tonight and tomorrow night.

Mrs. M. K. Lewis, who has been visiting with friends in this city, left for her home in Wellsdale this afternoon.

F. M. Hyde, of Harrisburg, spent the morning in Albany on business and returned to his home this afternoon.

Wm. Bain went to Corvallis this afternoon to attend to business matters in that city.
