WITHOUT HIS ASSISTANCE.

This victory of the single-item ve to forces in the senate is, in effect, marked triumph for Governor Withy combe. * * * In his inaugural address, the governor asked for the single-item veto.-Salem dispatch to Tel-

Governor Withycombe did not. his inaugural address, ask for the single-item veto. Not with a microscope an X-ray can anybody find it in his inaugural address. Nor can there be found any message to the legislature in which Governor Withycombe asked for the single-item veto.

Though urged to do so, Govern Withycombe refused to ask the legislature to submit the Kelaher resolution, giving the people the right to write the single-item veto into the constitution. He said he proposed to keep hands off, and explained that in doing so he is adhering to his preelection promises. He said that "his duty obligates him only to approve the resolution in case it is passed, and not to use any influence in its behalf."

Governor Withycombe made some good recommendations in his inaugural, one of which was the proposed trade commission, the bill for which has been killed in the senate. But, he distinctly refused to use the power of his office in favor of the single-item veto, a course that, in the late cam paign, it was charged he would take The single-item resolution passed without his assistance, and since, unlike a bill, the resolution does not pass through his office for assent or dissent, the measure will go to the people without his approval.-Portland Journal.
