PINEAPPLE GROWERS SEEK MARKET FOR FRESH FRUIT

Washington, Feb. 16.—A marketing division to assist pineapple growers has been organized by the U. S. department of agriculture's experiment station in the Hawaiian Islands. Prices which canners have been offering for pineapples are less than the cost of production. The Hawaiian pineapple grower today has to expend from $12 to $15 per ton to produce his fruit, whereas the price offered by the canners ranges from $5 to $11 per ton for first-grade pineapples and one-half these prices for second-grade products. As a result the small grower is now seeking a market for his fresh fruit in the United States. However, the business of shipping can hardly be carried on satisfactorily without organization and it is to help out in this connection that the new division has been organized, according to the latest report of the Hawaii Experiment Station.

It is also suggested in the report that better arrangements could be made if there were a branch of the marketing division in San Francisco, which should act as a central office for fresh pineapple shipments. This office could undoubtedly prevent the succession of bare and flooded markets which has characterized the previous condition of pineapple shipments.

The same office could also do valuable service in handling other Hawaiian products, such as sweet potatoes, onions, bananas, beans, coffee, coconuts, and kukui nuts. The last mentioned product is particularly valuable on account of its large oil content.

Aids Diversified Farming.
The army is a most important factor in the development of diversified farming in Hawaii. This branch of our government uses large quantities of corn, eggs, potatoes, poultry and other products, and the authorities are desirous of having the territory develop an independent source of food supply, as the possibilities of development along these lines are very great in these islands. Sudan grass, sorghum, legumes and other forage plants have already been planted by the department's experiment station in cooperation with the military post in order to furnish green feed for the horses.

Red and white Bermuda onion seed are doing well in Hawaii. Eight acres of onions yielded 32,210 pounds last year, not counting small onions of pickling size. Sugar cane and sweet corn have also made good yields.

Okra Grows High in Guam.
An American variety of okra which has attained a height of from 7 to 8 feet has been grown on heavy clay soil in our little possession of Guam far out on the Pacific. This variety is called white velvet, and the department's experiment station in Guam expects much of this variety.

A great number of American vegetables have been found to grow easily in Guam, including cucumbers, lettuce, radishes and beans. Eggplant produces heavy yields of excellent quality. One variety introduced with success has been the New York improved spineless. The pepper is also produced with the greatest ease and is much relished by the natives. For five years special attention has been given to growing the tomato in Guam, but until this year all efforts have failed. During the past season, however, a number of tomatoes were produced, which, although very small, were mild and savory and should prove prolific. Insect enemies have so far been very easily controlled in the case of practically all these vegetables.

Try This Way to Do Your Sewing, Madam---

"I find that with a little Electric Motor on my old sewing machine I can do better work without any of the backaches I used to experience.

"My husband says he believes in modern methods in the home just as much as in his factory.

"Why don't you 'phone the electric light company right now and ask them to tell you all about this little labor saver?"
