"The world war now being waged in Europe has taught us at least one lesson—that mighty armies and magnificent navies do not insure peace. To prepare for war seems even to invite it. If we want peace, rather than war, we must study to promote it. So long as material possessions have the last word in international controversies, so long will armies and navies occupy the front rank of the world's stage. Here is the task of all friends of peace—to influence men to esteem the ideal possessions of mankind higher than the material, and to promote the application of the Golden Rule in our political as well as in our personal relations. Shall we spend millions annually upon our army and navy, to encourage enmity, but nothing to cultivate amity? Are not treaties of conciliation and arbitration better than offensive and defensive alliances?

"Were half the power that fills the world with terror, Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts, Given to redeem the human mind from error, There were no need of arsenals or forts."

"Peace has its root in righteousness. Righteousness within and between nations is necessary—not the self-righteousness of men, but the righteousness that God alone can give. So the question, after all, is not one of expediency, but one of morals and religion. We love peace not because we would gladly live in comfort and apart from strife, but because peacemakers shall be called the children of God. May He whose cradle song was "Peace on Earth," that his heavenly music might penetrate into the hearts of men—may He who hath after his exaltation greeted his own with "Peace be with you," that they might bring this greeting as good news to all peoples in all the world—may He who came as "Prince of Peace" accomplish his own purposes through human history, through us, his messengers of peace."

To the Business Men of Albany
Message No. 1

When a good salesman goes out after business, he first puts on a clean collar and gets his shoes shined. Then he looks like more business—and he's made a flying start toward getting it. Likewise, a community can go after more business—and get it. The "clean collar and shiny shoes" of this town are the well-painted stores, the bright, cheery homes, the fresh, clean-looking buildings. The part paint plays in building up local pride cannot be put in figures—but its good effects are recorded on the local merchants' sale sheets. Buy good paint. We recommend and sell

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

memories of those loyal men, soldiers and sailors, who freely offered their lives at their country's call. Nothing has so impressed me in the program today as the organization of old soldiers bearing their country's flag. Year by year their ranks grow thinner, one by one the long familiar faces drop from view, but their devotion to Old Glory seems to grow stronger and deeper with each succeeding year.

"Is it any wonder that the old soldier loves the flag under whose folds he fought and for which his comrades so freely shed their blood? He loves it for what it is, and for what it represents. It embodies the purposes and history of the government itself. It records the achievements of its defenders on land and sea. It heralds the heroism and sacrifices of our revolutionary fathers who planted free government on this continent and dedicated it to liberty forever. It attests the struggles of our army and navy and the valor of our citizens in all the wars of the Republic. It has been consecrated by the blood of our best and our bravest. It records the achievements of Washington and the martyrdom of Lincoln. It has been bathed in the tears of a sorrowing people. It has been glorified in the hearts of a freedom-loving people, not only at home, but in every part of the world.

"Our flag expresses more than any other flag; it means more than any other national emblem. It expresses the will of a free people, and proclaims that they are supreme and that they acknowledge not earthly sovereign but themselves. At the sight of it every loyal American's heart throbs and swells with holy emotion. It is the manifestation of the immortal principles of patriotism. It means love of country. It means not only love of country, but love of liberty. This alone could have inspired over 2,800,000 Union soldiers to leave home and family and offer to die, if need be, for our imperiled institutions, and this alone could have reconciled their mothers and daughters, their wives and sweethearts, willingly though tearfully, to make the great sacrifice demanded. Love of country alone could have inspired 300,000 men to die for the Union. Nothing less sacred than this love of country could have sustained 175,000 brave men, who suffered, starved and died in Southern prisons. Nor could anything else have given comfort to the 500,000 maimed and diseased who escaped immediate death in seige and battle to end in torment the remainder of their patriotic lives. When the call to arms came again in 1898, nothing less than this could have so irresistibly drawn 200,000 of the flower of our young manhood to face death in a thousand forms under a tropic sun. And love of country will keep green the memory of these brave men whose graves we decorate today so long as the republic endures. Peace to their ashes.

"The muffled drum's sad toll has beat
The Soldiers' last tattoo;

No more on life's parade shall meet
That brave and fallen few.
On fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread.
And Glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead."

"But let us turn from the contemplation of the glories of the past to consideration of the problems and the duties of the present hour. In the words of the immortal Lincoln, on the field of Gettysburg: 'It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.'

"Our task is to preserve the blessing of peace. And here we are confronted with that strange paradox, 'In time of peace prepare for war.' Have we no alternative between war and preparation for war?

"Our wars have come once in each generation since the formation of our government. The hero of the Revolutionary war, which closed in 1783, was General Washington. The gratitude of the people made him twice president of the United States, and he lives with imperishable and growing fame in the affections of his countrymen. The hero of the next war, which closed in 1814, was General Jackson, also twice president of the United States. Between 1814 and 1846 the country was at peace. The soldier was unknown in our civil life. But the war with Mexico developed instantly the military spirit of the republic. The whole country was filled with war-like enthusiasm and anxiety to participate in the fight. The Mexican war produced two military heroes—General Scott and General Taylor—the latter becoming president of the United States. Another generation passed, and we had the Civil War, which closed in 1865. This contest was a supreme demonstration that peace does not decrease the military ardor, the vigor, or the patriotism of the American citizen. The hero of that war was General Grant, who became twice president of the United States.

"Then we had long peace, from 1865 to 1898. The American jingoes, who are perpetually seeking occasions for war, when no better reason offers, base their action upon the argument that the verility and manhood of a people degenerate unless kept alive by conditions which compel them to fight frequently for the honor and flag of their country. Some of them had insisted for years that this period had arrived, that patriotism and self-sacrificing courage were yielding to gross materialism, and unless we had our war we should soon see the decadence of the nation. But no sooner had war been declared against Spain than a generation which knew nothing of the scars, or of the battles, the glories, or the fury of the fighting of the Civil War, rushed to the recruiting offices to enlist as volunteers in numbers ten times beyond what was named in the call for troops. The inheritors of an ancestry which for generations have never yielded to a foe, have avenged wrongs, have vindicated right, have fought and died for their own liberty, and more, have fought and died for the liberty of others, have today, as they will have under the inspiring spirit of liberty for all time, that dominant spirit which makes their country powerful.
