GUY BATES POST IS NATIVE OF WASHINGTON

Player of "Omar" Turned From Law to the Stage For His Life Career.

Indications point to one of the best houses of the season here tonight when the curtain goes on the production of "Omar, the Tentmaker." Out of town orders have been coming in for several days, and from interest manifested among the lovers of good plays in this city there will be a very respectable showing present to welcome Guy Bates Post, Miss Louise

Mrs. A. Wood.

Tangent is improving, and now that it is incorporated will put on a new show. A new store and lunch counter has been opened by Mrs. Elizabeth Sharp, where those desiring anything in her line will be courteously treated.

L. B. Marsters has built an addition to his store where the postoffice is now located. He has finished up the upper story of his store building for a hall, where the L. O. O. F. will make their home for awhile.

The rain has stopped the cultivation and planting of gardens, but it has caused all kinds of vegetation to take on new growth especially the late sown grain. Farmers would be glad to see the weather clear up as many want to cut their clover hay which has made a vigorous growth in the last three weeks.

Early cherries are ripening, and many kinds of berries will soon be ready for use. The plum, prune, pear and apple crop is fairly good; the frost and cool weather caused much of the small fruit to prematurely fall off.

The school will close here on June 9, the baccalaureate sermon for the high school graduates will be preached on next Sunday. The present teachers have been employed for the next year.

Grassler and the rest of the splendid company that presents this charming play based on the life of the old Persian philosopher and poet, Omar Khayyam.

Mr. Post, who plays the leading role, was born in Seattle and received his early education in the public schools of that city, at Trinity school in San Francisco, and the University of California. In his youth he had an inclination to study law, but the yearning for the footlights however, soon definitely toppled law from his hands, and the young Theatopian joined a stock company in San Francisco. He did not remain long with this organization, but in 1893 was fortunate enough to receive from Kyrle Bellew and Mrs. James Brown Potter a part in their production of "Charlotte Corday." For some time he remained with the Bellew-Potter organization, appearing in "She Stoops to Conquer," "Camille," "The Reckless Raquin," "Francillon," and "Romeo and Juliet." Next came an engagement with William Owen in Shakespearean repertoire following which he played several parts for Otis Skinner in "Hamlet." A short time thereafter Mr. Post appeared for the first time in New York in "My Lady Daintily" with Herbert Kecey and Elsie Shannon.

The succeeding seasons were exceedingly busy ones, and it was not long before Mr. Post's name became identified with some of the greatest successes the American stage has ever known. Featured in "The Heir to the Throne," "The Virginian," and later in "Paid in Full." During the two year's career of the ill-fated New Theater in New York, the organization that was backed by the most prominent multi-millionaires of the metropolis, Mr. Post served there as leading man. Among other roles he created the part of the Beachcomber in Richard Walton Tully's "The Bird of Paradise," and it was because of his great success in that difficult role that Mr. Tully promised to write for Mr. Post's use a suitable and elaborate starring vehicle. "Omar, the Tentmaker," is the fulfillment of that promise.

To the Business Men of Albany

When a good salesman goes out after business, he first puts on a clean collar and gets his shoes shined. Then he looks like more business—and he's made a flying start toward getting it.

Likewise, a community can go after more business—and get it. The "clean collar and shiny shoes" of this town are the well-painted stores, the bright, cheery homes, the fresh, clean-looking buildings. The paint plays in building up local pride cannot be put in figures—but its good effects are recorded on the local merchants' sale sheets. Buy good paint. We recommend and sell and pure linseed oil. We know of nothing else so satisfactory, so lasting and cheap in the long run. We sell all other paint necessities as well. Get in touch with us today.

Dutch Boy Collier White Lead
