A PESSIMISTIC BOTANIST BECOMING ALARMED

Chicago, June 17.—There is grave danger that a famine will descend upon the United States some time in the near future, according to Professor John M. Coulter, head of the Department of Botany of Chicago University. Population here, said the professor, is increasing twenty times faster than the food supply.

"We ought to have enough food-stuffs in this country to feed the world," said Prof. Coulter. "Instead, we soon shall not have enough food for ourselves. The growing discrepancy between food production and population is the basis of the high cost of living."

"Four remedies present themselves to prevent famine in the United States. First we should develop scientific methods of cultivation of the soil. We must manipulate the soil properly, and farm intensively, as the Europeans do. By scientific treatment of the soil crops can be increased 300 per cent in the United States."

"Second, we must plant on every acre the crop which will give the maximum yield in that section. Stop planting wheat in corn land and don't try to raise potatoes in swamps. Too many farmers plant their crops without knowledge of what their land is suited for. "We must, in the third place, develop drought crops. This is the work of the professional botanist, and is to be accomplished through experiment. "Then, at last, we must produce disease resisting crops, for plants, like animals, are subject to ill of the flesh. This, too, is the work of the botanist."

If these suggestions are carried out with reasonable thoroughness the high cost of living will vanish, as concerns foodstuffs."
