MRS. A. C. ZEHNER, Lecturer

Women are constantly attaining a more important place in American life. The woman who thinks and who has a live message to present is greatly in demand.

Such women are called for on the Chautauqua platform, and one who has made a big reputation in such gatherings is Mrs. A. C. Zehner, who will give a number of lectures in this state.

MRS. A. C. ZEHNER.

this summer and will be at the assembly here.

Mrs. Zehner was born in the south, the daughter of a heavy slaveholding family. She was taught to abhor a Yankee, and her environment was such as to instill sectional feeling. Her breadth of thought is shown by the fact that she married a Yankee, and the keynote of her lectures now is that this nation will do things in proportion as it does away with sectional feeling of every sort. Wherever she goes, and she has lectured for twenty years and in many states, she inspires and pleases and is commended and invited back.

GOOD PLAY ON AT THE HUB THEATRE TONIGHT

Following is the story of "The War of the Wild," the two act Universal feature which comes to the Hub Theatre today and Thursday.

William Wallace, an American circus owner, visits Central Africa to hunt wild animals with which to replenish his menagerie. His daughter, Marie, and his trainer Steven Larson accompany him. They arrive in Kronjez, a small village, and Wallace makes arrangements with one John Plympton, a local hunter, to secure for him a number of wild animals and to pilot him to the best hunting grounds.

Larson, the trainer, is infatuated with Marie, who, however, resents his attentions. Plympton's interest in Marie, and his success in the hunt, arouses the jealousy of Larson, and excites in him a desire for revenge. When, however, the hunting party has succeeded in catching a ferocious lioness, Larson brings one of the helpers to free the lioness, believing that it will attack Plympton. The helper is repaid for his treachery by being chased by the lioness.

The next day Larson meets a company of Arab slave traders, and persuades them to attack the hunters, promising they will be well rewarded with both slaves and plunder. The Arabs willingly act on Larson's suggestions, and when they come upon Wallace, Plympton and their party, a pitched battle takes place in which the Arabs are successful. Larson seeks out Marie and is in the act of carrying her off when Plympton's elephant, which has been kindly treated by Marie, comes to her rescue by attacking Larson and throwing him over a cliff. The elephants having accomplished this, returns to Marie, picks her up and carries her to Plympton's house. In the meantime, Plympton has succeeded in saving himself and Wallace from the Arabs, and they arrive in Kronjez in flight from their Arabian pursuers, but grieving over the fate of Marie and the loss of their associates. The failure of the expedition and all else, however, is forgotten in their joy at finding that Marie has been carried home by the elephant.
