WEDNESDAY, JULY 28, 1915

A BAD BUNCH.

Under the above head the Guard says: The preliminary campaigning of the Republican party would lead the average man to think that the leaders of that body learned very little from the results of the defeat administered to them in the 1912 campaign.

They are at the present time placing before the country as probable candidates the very men who controlled the convention which nominated Taft, Fairbanks, Root, Weeks, and men of the ultra-tandpat tendencies are names mentioned.

It seems hard to believe that these men are contemplated seriously enough to merit attention, but the history of the men in control of the Republican organization proves that they are running true to form in offering such men to the country as possible candidates for the presidency in 1916.

It would seem that the men in control have been very badly misinformed as to the trend of the people's thought or they have neglected to find out what the people are thinking about, if they imagine that there is a possibility of the electors of this country accepting men of this stamp as their president.

The people are progressive and these men are not and neither is any man that the present controlling influences of the Republican party will allow the nomination. Standpatism will not attract votes in the next campaign and for that matter neither will radical progressivism.

If the Republican leaders really want to nominate a good man—one in whom the people of this country have confidence they have such a man in associate justice Charles A. Hughes. With such a man they have a chance to unite their party but if they go before the country with men of the Root, Fairbanks, stamp, they face the same result that they achieved in 1912.

MISFITS

A year of war and it is which and other.

The accomplishment is several million killed, ruined homes, cities torn to shreds, hearts broken, minds crazed, friendships shattered, precedent ignored, international law disregarded and general chaos.

So far as results go the balance is on the side of Germany, which has kept the allies from her own soil.

Engraving the Lord's Prayer on a pinhead may be a marvellous feat; but one had better turn one's attention to bigger things, for instance engrave the prayer in your heart.
