WHAT CAN BE DONE ON A SMALL FARM

One Oregonian Raised 670 Varieties of Products, Shown in Oregon Building.

San Francisco, July 28.—An exhibit in the Oregon pavilion, Palace of Horticulture, that attracts a great deal of attention is that one showing 670 varieties of products from a single farm. This showing is made by D. M. Lowe, of Jackson county, who is particularly well known to Oregon State Fair attendants. This exhibit is made up of grains, grasses, fruits, vegetables, the legumes, several varieties of corn, flax, and about every thing else namable. The average visitor is thoroughly amazed that such a tremendous variety of products can be produced, on a single farm and many stay to discuss the situation thoroughly. That this production is obtained without the aid of irrigation, that the products grow to a splendid maturity without interruption, and that so much of the exhibit is a large case of silver cups, medals and blue ribbons that Mr. Lowe has won by similar exhibits at other exhibitions and state fairs. This is a magnificent advertisement for southern Oregon and the state at large and furnishes great opportunity for attendants to dwell upon Oregon opportunity and possibility. A companion exhibit also assists very materially in this effort at exploitation. This is the splendid showing made by F. M. Sherman, of Linn county. He shows what can be grown on an unirrigated ten-acre farm and there is an unusual variety of fine products. However, Mr. Sherman has discovered that it pays to grow first-class seed of all kinds and this is his special effort. There is always a strong demand for good seed at a good price and he recommends this industry to those on the small tracts. The public finds his exhibit of great interest.

Miss Winkley Here—

Miss Flo Winkley, of Portland, came over from Corvallis last evening, after a visit with her brother H. L. there, and will visit with her folks down at Conser for awhile.

Will Come Up Again.

Supt. Hutton, of the Anti Saloon League recently made this statement: "If anyone in Oregon is looking forward to any easy time next year he had better disabuse himself of that opinion immediately. The principal wholesale liquor firm of the state has purchased a new machine for automatically addressing envelopes, and has ordered 300,000 stencils—exactly the number of registered voters in the state. Six girls are now busy cutting them at the rate of 4,500 per day. These stencils are being cut for the purpose of conducting a campaign of education next year preparatory to the repeal of the prohibition amendment in November, 1916. Plans for the conduct of a publicity bureau are already under way.

"There is a national crisis also. The Anti-Saloon league forces of America are facing a national crisis. The liquor interests have determined, not only to keep prohibition out of the party platforms, but to declare in the national platforms of both democratic and republican parties that this is purely a state issue."
