SATURDAY NIGHT THOUGHTS

In the European war the Germans have continued to advance along the Eastern line, and it has become more evident this week than ever, that Petrograd is the goal sought, that the capital of the country, where resides the czar himself and his German wife, the Kaiser's cousin, will be the terminus of the trip the kaiser is now taking.

A striking feature of the war this week was the sinking of the Arabic, a British liner, just starting for New York.

The fact that the vessel had been used to carry munitions to England will play a big part in the settlement of the matter.

In the meantime why is England, supposed to be the greatest maritime country in the world, allowing the Germans to have submarines on all sides of it? It's lack of hustle is becoming excruciating to people liking to see a game fight.

A national event attracting the most attention was perhaps the lynching of Leo Frank, the Georgia pencil factory superintendent, convicted of murder, but in the minds of most people innocent. It was a dark affair, full of dishonor, happening in such a way as to involve the state as partner in the murder.

Several hundred people losing their lives on account of big storms in Texas has been one of the disasters of the week. Coming with the suddenness of an explosion it has been a shock to the country.

MISFITS

A Stayton girl received a proposal and took a week to consider it, in the meantime interviewing several wives. One had received $2 since marriage and worked all the time for her six children; another was a school teacher who had to support her husband, a third didn't dare say her soul was her own, and the fourth was divorced. The week is up and the wedding will soon take place.

The Salem Journal says the Portland evening papers extras that come up here are no newspapers, just fakes made up from the day before, and printed at 11 a. m., with big scare heads.

Advertising is as much of an investment as the goods on the shelves.

What are English subs and destroyers doing anyway?

These international problems come hick and fast, making our gray matter sputter to keep up with them.

The Arabic had been carrying war munitions to Great Britain, and the Germans probably knew it.

The English boat that carries munitions is spotted, and Americans had better keep off her.

A late one: "Good, Bill's here, I heard a Ford door."

What a difference. One man is judged by his deeds, others by their misdeeds.

An auto paper just issued looks almost like the Saturday Evening Post; but it isn't.
