SATURDAY NIGHT THOUGHTS.

About the only definite result of the big war this week has been the slaughter of thousands of the best young men of Europe, torn down in their youth, leaving broken hearted mothers, sisters, wives and children. With winter coming on the fighting has been fierce; but then fighting is always fierce. It has to be. Hoping to do something definite before the snow and cold arrive the armies have been stretching themselves, and the result is simply more dead.

Things have been a little quiet down Mexico way; but nothing is settled, and there is little to indicate a peaceful solution of the difficulties of that country. The people seem to be built for dissension. At least it has been the long record. This, though, should be no reason for its continuance. With vast resources of a wonderfully varied nature the country should be one of the most prosperous in the world.

Some more storms this week set people to thinking of the uncertainty of things. Even in a night transformation occurs, and places that were homes become waste. Things that seem solid easily crumble when the great hand of nature swings a storm into motion.

This week Oregon has had the best state fair in its history. Many things indicate the improvement. One thing is a decided improvement to the equipment, a fine new building and pavement. Other things are greater displays and ones of a new character, full of interest. It is becoming an exposition. So far as it goes no world's fair could make a better showing. It speaks well for Oregon.

Albany has seen much of excitement this week over events growing out of the escape of a convict. In the first place he should not have escaped; but he did. Then in fast order occurred tragedies, ending in the man's own undoing. It has given people much to talk about and speculate over. Whatever one's view of different things the fact needs to be emphasized that under all circumstances men should be treated humanely when down. Hooker's great mistake was in starting on a career of crime. He gradually paved the way for the end that came.

Bids invited for the property at 438 West Second Street, Albany. Apply to J. R. Eldridge, 1254 Fort St., Victoria, B. C. No reasonable offer refused. $30-a31

MISFITS

Albany's industrial fair is being filled up with pep.

If the Linn county display at the state fair is transferred to this city, that alone will be worth seeing. For one collected in a week it is a marvel.

That big loan is a mistake. The money should be kept this side of the Atlantic. Nevertheless there is satisfaction in the fact that it will come right back for more ammunition.

John Chinaman of the field now knows something about what a great European war is.

Mr. Weather Man treated the state fair well this year; but of course had to have at least a couple days of wet.

Some things are principally name. One was press day at the fair.

In order to keep Corvallis people at home that city will have a dollar day at the same time of Albany's. Shrewd business men over the river.

Now that copper is needed badly in the war the price is in an aeroplane. A grasping old world this.

A Salem paper says that one day's races lifted the people out of their seats at the finish. As a matter of fact they get up out of their seats at the dinkiest little race run, even a boy's pony race.

Another week ended, and have you noticed how weeks fly past like telegraph poles through a car window.
