SATURDAY NIGHT THOUGHTS.

An American who has just returned from Europe says Russia is in the throes of a revolution. Germany is badly in need of more men. British affairs are in a shocking condition and France hardly knows where it is. It means that affairs are gradually working towards a crisis that is bound to cause some kind of a settlement of the turmoil. No one can figure out the shape of it though.

Little Greece this week has been in the frying pan. It is afflicted with a pro-war element, and also has an element who most of the people of this country, decidedly against war. The Greeks on that side and is anxious his people to keep his people out of the muddest.

There were some off year elections this week, not attracting very much attention politically, though considerably from a woman's suffrage standpoint. The defeat of suffrage was very emphatic. According to a striking cartoon in the Oregonian those who will rejoice the most over this are saloon men, political bosses, huns, grafters and henpecked husbands. As a matter of fact though, there is an organization of women, with headquarters at Boston, that have kept up a campaign for years against suffrage. Eventually probably in every state in the Union women will vote the same as men.

A revival is in progress in this city this week. People do well to stop and take an inventory of their character in its relationship to its Maker. In the great struggles of the world after business, social preference and political aggrandizement men easily get sidetracked and need to be set on the right track again.

It doesn't take much to discourage one if one looks at the lives of others professing to be Christians, as they go wobbling along, half the time on the side of the devil. Each person, though, must stand on his own pedestal, looking in his own mirror.

The football has some use after all. It has boosted Oregon into prominence for awhile at least, and placed one of its college teams high up on the mountain side of fame. Heretofore the east has looked upon the coast as inferior in matters of athletics, but we are not. We have the men and the training, the pep that makes the wheels vibrate.

MISFITS

"Faithful are the words of a friend, but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful" is as true now as when written several thousand years ago, as a good many people can testify.

Not words, but deeds are what testify to true friendship.

No honeyed words and palaver, but cuts full of meat.

Experience is a ripe old teacher.

Oregonians returning from the East will declare things are picking up, not just the chickens, but times.

Ex-Sheriff Bob Stevens of Portland says the manufacturing plants are running overtime. Whoopla. Now stop our growls and proceed forward.

The boy or girl who can say the following ten times without getting his or her tongue twisted into a snake will please call on Misfits and get a litle package of gum: Strictly strong Stephen Stringer snared six Sickly silky snakes.

If old Mars himself should happen to light down somewhere around Sereno his blood would boil at the sights.

If you want to get a rep, just call people the warmest names you can invent. Kipling is considered great because he wrote the Vampire and one or two other live poems. In that poem he called woman "a rag, bone and hank of hair."

The anti-hyphenites have gotten into the middle of the line.
