SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1916.

THE YEAR 1916

1916 came in white, in this Willamette valley, one of the garden spots of the world, an occasion that is rare here, where our winters are green and our temperature mild. This year is filled with enormous possibilities, beyond the comprehension of men. No one can tell what the twelve months will bring forth. It is an absolute guess whether the war will cease before the first of next January, or will be in progress, whether the United States will remain neutral or be pulled into the unholy struggle. The people of this country can only watch and hope.

The work of the present congress will play a great part in the future of this country. Upon it is a tremendous responsibility, the moulding of a great policy. It is up to it to say whether the United States shall remain a peace loving country, or one in which militarism predominates, suggestive all the time of war and possibilities of war. The greatest thing in a home is its peaceful character. So it is in a nation. Whatever conduces to peace within and with the world at large is a strong fabric in the structure. In the past it is militarism that has made nations to fall. It will always be so. The greatest strength of a nation are its industries, not its army and navy. The time has past when the home has to have a gun handy for quick action. It should be so with nations, and the only way to have it so is for a great nation like the United States to make it so by its example.

The outlook for the United States in a commercial way for 1916 is good increasing as the months pass. With a healthy foundation for business Albany's progress this year, as in the past, should be steady and reliable, without any brass band attachments. It has not been a city of booms but of plodding progress, one of gradual development. Situated as it is there can be no question but what this will continue.

Perhaps the greatest of all concern is that of the individual. The person who builds up his own character into a better manhood has done much for the world, and it is well when character is placed above greed in the great battle of life.

OREGON DRY.

Oregon is now dry by order of the people of the state, who rule. It should be made so in the spirit of the law, which provides for a wide personal liberty in its provisions, making all violations of it for business purposes entirely inexcusable. Under the change the state will not go to the dogs. Nothing ever goes to the dogs without liquor. Instead it should improve. Bank deposits should increase with the money going into substantial channels instead of into waste. The enforcement of the law will probably be like that of other laws, incomplete. No law is enforced fully, nor can it be, but all have a restraining influence, and this one in the long run is bound to work for good here as elsewhere, as it becomes established and respected. There will continue to be some drunkenness, but it will steadily decrease, as people get the habit out of their systems.

MISFITS

1916.

There, we did get 'er right.

Will we keep getting the figures correctly?

Last year was one full of mistakes, and there'll be plenty this year. We're all built that way, some more, some less.

Next Monday is debt paying day; but special days don't amount to much. It is daily principle that counts.

That's the rub with resolutions too. The colors are not set very well.

Those fine doors at the p. o. have kept swelling until it takes a strong man to open them when once they get united.

Another storm blew over and Austria and the U. S. are on good terms.

By the way a good deal of the fuss was simply yellow journalism, wanting a sale of street copies.

Congress needs to do some good resolving more than anyone else, or anything else.

Better think several times before thrusting this country into the maelstrom of militarism and the burden of an enormous preparedness war tax, that will operate mostly for ammunition and gun factories.

When the present war is over the countries of the world won't be in any humor to spend much more in preparedness if the U. S. has the judgment to keep out of the game. The masses are against the scheme.

The objection is not to a reasonable army and navy; but to such big ones as to make this a military dominated country.
