The House of a Thousand Scandals

Spectacle of young men and maidens, members of the Greek colony, in classic costume dancing and walking through the streets and lanes of a country village to the horror of the townspeople—the riotous outbursts of the villagers against them—the storing of the cult's home—and the tragic climax—are main features of this captivating photoplay. The story, however, centers about the love of Millionaire John Wright for Martha Hobbs, a beautiful country girl, told in a succession of exciting scenes. A true to life play, full of swing and go. "THE PRIMROSE PATH" A HUB FEATURE TONIGHT

Harold Lockwood and May Allison, talented young stars of the silent drama, who hold so firm a place in the hearts of the motion picture fans, are the featured players in "The House of a Thousand Scandals," a Mutual Masterpicture in four acts, produced by the American Film company, Inc.

"The House of a Thousand Scandals" is, as with the majority of the Mutual Masterpicture releases, a truly interesting story, fairly alive with heart interest, replete with action, unusual climaxes and plentifully interspersed with humor.

It is a real play, for a real, red-blooded people and, while in no sense of the word a preachment, nevertheless it contains one of the most humanly interesting stories ever screened.

The scenes, particularly those in which the Greek dances, produced under the direction of Miss Margaret Hawkesworth, take place, are the most pretentious of their kind ever filmed. This interesting drama will be seen at the Rolfe Theatre tonight and Thursday.

"The Primrose Path," the Universal's frank sex problem photodrama, has attracted such attention that Manager Searles of the Hub Theatre, announces that the sensational feature will be shown at his house today and Thursday.

This film is a picturization of Bayard Veiller's play of that name, and features Gladys Hansen, former leading lady with E. H. Sothorn.

Veiller's central character is a woman who, speaking in the language of the title, takes a few steps on the "primrose path" in order that her husband may not die of hunger and lack of medical attendance. Having prospered by this supreme sacrifice, John, the husband, proceeds to get well. He becomes a popular painter of debutantes, and little by little becomes more ashamed of his very plain wife.

In time John becomes so enamored of one young lady that her father proposes to Joan, the wife, that she recede in favor of his daughter. And then Joan tells him of her sacrifice. Her words are overheard by her husband, who at last awakes to her love and his own worthlessness, and so all is happy again.

On Joan lies the picture's sympathetic power. The author has placed her in a series of appealing situations that follow one another in rapid succession after she has made that self-sacrificing step on the "primrose path." Gladys Hansen makes the most of this featured role, playing with a strong show of emotion in all her many scenes.

Both the direction and scenario are adequate, while the settings are many times most gorgeous. The Parisian cabaret scene, for instance, is very realistic in its setting. There is nothing vague about it.

Hal Forde is chief of the support as Ned the husband. Helen, the other woman, is played by Wina Blake, while E. Cooper-Willie appears as Joan's mother.

"Her Husband's Wife."

Richardson & Talbert Stock Company present "Her Husband's Wife," for the last three nights of this week starting Thursday. This is one of the funniest comedies imaginable, it is the story of a woman who is a hypochondriac who imagines that she is going to die, she loves her husband very dearly and it is her desire that he be happy after she is so she selects him a future wife who begins immediately to alienate the husband's affections. This arouses the wife's jealousy and the complications that follow are extremely amusing and needless to say that it brings about a speedy recovery to the afflicted woman. Come prepared to laugh as you have never laughed before. It's the best medicine in the world for the blues. "Kentucky Sue" last time tonight.

FARMERS WEEK AT THE O. A. C. NOW IN PROGRESS

The First Day Was Given Up to Good Roads and Woman's Congress.

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, Jan. 4.—The first of the six big days of Farmers' Week at the Oregon Agricultural College opened early Monday morning with a large number of special students, delegates to conventions, special speakers and other interested persons in attendance. Arrangements have been made by the management to have all trains reaching Corvallis met by committees who provide necessary information on matters of registration, living accommodations, and other things essential to getting quickly and properly located for work. A large number of attendants are back for the second term of Farmers' week and were already familiar with the purposes of qualifying for admission to the exercises in which they were especially interested.

The first day's work consisted largely of a conference of good roads men called by Professor G. V. Skelton, who is in charge of this department of College Extension work. A number of road officers from counties especially noted for their excellent work in building and maintaining roads, were in attendance and contributed many valuable points. The questions considered dealt with methods of constructing and maintaining roads, with considerable emphasis laid on the question of road patrols. It was pointed out that a great deal of damage is done roads through neglect to repair slight damages before they reach disastrous proportions, and it was shown that the only successful way in which this could be done is to have the road patrolled by someone who has some knowledge of mending roads and will either repair damage himself or report it to the road supervisor in charge.

Another feature of Monday's exercises was the women's congress which convened for the first session of a six day meet. Two of the most noted home economic experts of North America, Miss Alice Ravenhill, of Vancouver Island, B. C., and Miss Anna Barrows, of Boston. These experts consider the question not merely from the standpoint of food preparation, clothing and shelter but also from the more comprehensive view of the educational and social relations of the rural communities. This congress is attended by the number of delegates representing different organizations, state and local, that have been formed to deal with problems related to rural betterment. Instruction offered included not only lectures, conferences and discussions, but likewise a number of demonstrations at least one of which will be given each day during the entire week.
