AGAINST MILITARISM.

The friends of Pennsylvania, noted for their peaceable characters, and advocates of peace, have sent memorial to congress, with the following as the main points:

1. Advocates of "preparedness" urge national defense as the only justification for their program. Aggressive warfare by the United States is inconceivable, unless the temper of the people is changed by the existence of greater armaments.

It is our conviction that:— (a) We are already defended geographically by two oceans, by an unfortified northern boundary of three thousand miles that has proved a sure guarantee of peace for a century, and by a southern frontier where self-restraint and magnanimous patience have maintained peace in the face of extreme provocation.

(b) The citizens of the United States are composite people of many racial strains. We are connected so intimately by ties of blood and sympathy with all the nations of the world that public opinion would make a war with any of the great powers practically impossible. These international bonds are a pledge of continued friendship and good will.

(c) The terrible war now in progress is exhausting the strength of the combatants. The inconceivable wreckage and waste of life, treasure, industry, commerce and intellectual and moral force are reducing all the great European powers to a condition from which they cannot soon recover. This is a fact and not a supposition. Japan, the only other power mentioned as a possible antagonist, has shown a consistent desire to maintain friendly relations with our country, and is already heavily burdened by taxes and an overwhelming war debt.

2. A policy of military expansion on a grand scale will commit the United States to militarism. True democracy and militarism are contradictory. The one must destroy the other.

It is almost impossible to arrest a militaristic policy when once it is launched. Fear is added to fear, false ideals flourish, international friendship changes to suspicion, special interests warp the public mind.

The true greatness of the United States in international affairs has not rested upon naval and military force, but upon candor, and good will, a high sense of national honor and fundamental justice.

3. The great war is abundant proof that great armaments are not a protection against attack. In the hands of a militaristic administration they may be a fertile cause of war. They are a constant menace on the one hand and an invitation to aggression on the other. They fill the popular imagination, so that if differences arise between nations the people cry out for war, and thus force becomes the basis of settlement rather than justice and equity.

The genius of the United States has been for arbitration and the judicial settlement of international disputes.

MISFITS

The opinion is unanimous that the Villistas should be punished summarily, entitled to no mercy.

Albany appreciates being between the big storm areas.

Money not only has wings; but over in Europe it is all wings.

B. Strong, a Roseburg undertaker, ought to be a success as a physical director.

Mrs. Story, a former Oregon woman, who resides at Carmi, Ill., is 103 years of age. She smokes a clay pipe and doesn't wear corsets. Now figure out why Mrs. Story is so aged.

Several people have discovered that the saloon has been moved into the home. That's just where it belongs, where the wife can have a hand in affairs, officiating as barkeeper.

Cottage Grove has a Jayhawker Society. Must be breezy.

Again we are reminded that it is good sense to keep as far away from danger as possible.

Without the honor of a coyote, the people of this country will do well to stay away from the other side of the Mexican border. It is full of human dynamite.

In a play at the movies a girl held off two burglars with a common wrench that looked like a revolver. In Chicago a boy with a toy pistol and some red pepper made nineteen hold-ups, so these movies are not far off after all.

An Albany man meeting a girl in front of the Democrat building asked her the difference between an optimist and a pessimist. "I don't know what a pessimist is," she said, "but I know Miss Meade is an optimist."
