BOY CORN GROWERS OF THE NORTHWEST MAKE GOOD SHOWING AT FIRST NATIONAL CORN SHOW

Exhibit by Boy Corn Raisers FIRST NATIONAL CORN SHOW

St. Paul, Minn.—"If the boy corn growers of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon continue the progress they have made in the last year these states soon will be in the front rank as producers of juvenile agriculturists," according to Professor R. A. Moore of the University of Wisconsin, who judged the boys' exhibits at the First National Corn Show held in the mammoth Hill Railway Building, this city. Trophy cup awards valued at $5,000 were given by the First National Bank and the Northwestern Trust Company.

An exceptionally fine quality of corn was raised by the boys of the Northwest for exhibition in this show. These "future greats" in the corn raising field are rapidly putting these states on the map as a new and wonderful corn belt. "Why the corn laid down here for me to judge has proved the most surprising in quality that have examined in the long years of my association with the grain," said Professor Moore. Considering Professor Moore's great reputation throughout the United States as a corn judge this statement by him spells the highest tribute that could be paid to boyhood effort in this country.

There were no sweepstakes in the show, the competition of the boy corn growers of the eight states being confined to the boys in the districts of their state. Following are the prize winners in each of the states:

may of his mother, Lady Lerode. She wires Gladys to come on in order to prevent a scandal and he, made suddenly alive to his peril, drops his work and hastens to Paris where he tells Lerode that his calls on Mrs. Gladys must cease. The affair has gone too far however, and Muriel and young Lerode elope that night. They are overtaken by Gladys, who, in his masterful way is about to put an end to the artist, when, in a powerful scene, Muriel tells him it is not love, but pride in John Gladys's honor that makes him wish to kill, and he is crushed with the realization that he has forever lost her love. The play ends with him sadly realizing that in gaining power, he has lost that which he most needed to enjoy it.

A big, forceful theme, worked out to its convincing end with the master touch.

JUDGE GALLOWAY IN ADDRESS ON LATE JOHN MINTO

Paid Tribute to the Pioneer on Burns Birthday As Highway Pathfinder.

In an address at Salem on the 157th anniversary of the birth of Burns, Judge Wm. Galloway took occasion to pay a tribute to John Minto, who had been president of the Burns club since its organization.

On this the 157th anniversary of the birth of the great Scotch poet, Robert Burns, I am asked to say something of another poet, writer and Oregon pioneer, who never let the natal day of "Bobby" Burns pass without celebrating the occasion with song and feast.

I knew Mr. Minto intimately from my childhood and can never think of him without associating him with two other noted pioneers of Oregon born under Britain's flag, Dr. John McLaughlin, born in Scotland, and Hon. F. X. Matthew, a native of Canada. These three pioneers were bosom friends and collaborators in laying broad and secure the foundation of our young commonwealth. Their remains line on the banks of the beautiful Willamette they loved so dearly, and no men more loyal to the American flag or American institutions ever breathed the pure air of heaven.

Mr. Minto was a native of England, born in 1822, crossed the plains to Oregon in 1844 and settled near Salem where in 1845 he married Martha Ann Morrison, a pioneer of 1844. Of this worthy pioneer woman it can be truly said she was of the highest stamp of American womanhood and was no man's inferior. Of this happy union there were eight children born, three only surviving, being valued residents of Salem, their native city. Minto was born of the common people, lived the life of the people he so loved and died with a last prayer for the supremacy of the plain people. He often said "We have too many paupers and too many idle rich, but not enough of the great mass of the common people who move the world civilly, morally and financially."

Our constitution written by our pioneer fathers is the most enlightened and progressive of any state constitution in the union. Our civil and criminal code enacted by our early legislatures of which Mr. Minto was often a member and always a valued adviser, has done more to break down sex distinctions under the law than that of any other American state. Those pioneer legislators who had toiled for six or seven months crossing the plains with their wives and children in their ox teams, had learned the value and superiority of true womanhood; hence under the laws of Oregon, there is no sex distinction in the possession of property. A woman in Oregon can hold land in her own name, can sue and be sued, can administer upon the estate of her deceased husband, and is the legal guardian of her own children, she pays taxes and has a voice in saying how those taxes shall be expended. In Oregon no sex inequality or sex inferiority is recognized by law, and it can be truthfully said that no man living or dead has done more to incorporate those sacred and inalienable rights of the people into our statutes than our departed and beloved friend, John Minto.

Mr. Minto was a most retiring man who accepted office and position of public trust as a duty imposed upon citizenship. He was eminently qualified and might have filled any office in the gift of the people of his adopted state. He was a pathfinder in searching for highways and means of communication with other sections of this great northwest and the eastern states. I believe Mr. Minto would have preferred the honor of discovering an improved mountain passageway for egress and ingress to the Willamette valley or the improvement of some species of our domestic animals than the honors of a membership in congress.

In politics Mr. Minto was a Democrat until the Civil War when he associated himself with the Republican party, though was never a strict partisan in any sense. He was a member of the Odd Fellows and Elks orders and when he passed away was the oldest member of those orders in the state.

Mr. Minto was a student to the very last moment of his long and useful life, he read and wrote continuously and has left his impress upon every page of Oregon history. He loved the birds of the air and the beasts of the forest, yet, everything in nature from the flowers of the valley to the snow capped peak of Mount Hood, with such a soul and heart it is but natural that the writings of the great Scotch poet Burns should have held first place in his literary affections.

Mr. Minto died at the age of 92 years, beloved by all who knew him or had ever felt the inspiration of his pen and muse.
