since our civil war, caused the government much trouble, millions of wild geese were seen upon this stream.

Mount Hood was plainly visible from this point. From a small place called Yellepit, to Portland, we follow the right bank of the Columbia river. It was here some sixty miles from Portland, that we were delayed some three hours on account of a heavy landslide; the S. P. R. R. runs through a deep cut of the spur of a mountain, consisting of earth and shale, and this last time made us too late to go on to our destination—Albany. This trouble required 30 men from 1 p. m. to 9 p. m. with some mechanical assistance to clear the track. As I have already mentioned, this city is situated in the valley from forty to one hundred miles wide with the Cascade mountains on the one side and the Coast Range on the other. Many surprises were in store for on arriving in this part of northern Oregon; but to see, is to know.

FREE LESSON IN EYELET EMBROIDERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

December 24th Christmas Eve, we listened to the singing of some 400 public school children, tender, with their sweet youthful voices, patriotic and sentimental melodies; these exercises took place on the school campus, in the open air, and a large pine tree was gaily decorated and illuminated with many colored electric lights, "and all went merry as marriage bells."

Did I say it rains, yet it rains, rains, and then rains some more; and then again it doesn't rain, and the sun shines, and the air is as sweet and balmy as a May or June morning. Do the Oregonians stay out in the rain—no; men will work out in the rain all day in their shirt sleeves, or thinly clad and stoically take it as a matter of habit or necessity.

Among the surprises awaiting our advent in this part of Oregon, not the least was to find the fields and lawns clothed in such a luxuriously mass of rich green foliage, cattle, sheep, goats, horses and cows contentedly grazing in rich pastures; garden truck of all kinds still in the field and out doors, English ivy is in almost every front yard, and one very noticeable thing is so many beautiful English Daisies, that seem to the "Manor born," for they are in evidence everywhere. The holly, with its bright red berries is a native here.

Roses, of the most fragrant varieties, are in abundance, and in the open air. I notice from a private letter from home, the death of one of Sylvania's most esteemed citizens, W. B. Harris, a man who was trusted, honored and loved by all who knew him; a member of our community whose position in life, but few will be found capable of filling.

Official Text Received.

(By United Press)

"INSPIRATION" INSPIRES AT ROLFE LAST NIGHT

Audrey Munson, famed as the most beautiful artist's model in the world, made her appearance on the screen in the Rolfe Theatre last night in the five act Mutual Masterpicture, "Inspiration," and captured a crowded house. Nude? Yes, she was nude, in some scenes not having a thread of clothing as she posed for some great work. But not shocking. There was not a suggestive line in the play and in no case was there an indication of voluptuousness.

The attractive posters used to advertise the play might have lead some to look for something bordering on the obscene, and those who went out of any such curiosity were terribly mistaken. In the first place Miss Munson does not suggest anything but purity. Her face is called beautiful, as is her body, by artists; but to the uncultured in art it is not a beauty of every day parlance. There is a serenity in her expressions, a grace in her pose, that bespeaks the ideal, and the whole play is as far from vulgar as could be.

True, there is a glimpse of Bohemia, that elusive land of the artist where joy reigns in good fellowship, but even there there is only a pretty dance scene and nothing out of the ordinary.

The picture might aptly be termed a lesson in art. There is a true demonstration of the making of a plaster cast on the body of Miss Munson. Sixty-five minutes are required to make the impression, and every detail of this trying work is shown. Then the parts of the cast are tied together and a mould taken, reproducing Miss Munson's form identically. Other illustrations are given of the sculptor's work, and his manner of proceeding.

As an actress we confess Audrey Munson does not class with Mary Pickford, for that is not her work. However, she was natural enough in her part and for the main purpose of the play she is a success. Thomas A. Curran, the artist, is good in his part. The play contains but a trace of a plot, and is not important enough to seriously mention.

But it is a work worth seeing, and one should attend with the understanding that in some scenes Miss Munson is nude, that there is very little to the play as plot and that there is nothing suggestive or shocking in it. That is all a question of attitude of the individual mind. Mention should also be made of the pictures of the many beautiful statues shown in the picture, noted works.
