KEEP OFF BELLIGERENT SHIPS

The United States government some time ago suggested to all the European belligerents that merchant ships be disarmed as a measure of protection to non-combatant passengers.

In view of the revelation that British merchant vessels have been definitely instructed not only to defend themselves with their armament if attacked, but to seek the destruction of enemy submarines, there is justice and reason in the determination of Germany to treat such vessels hereafter as ships of war.

It is certainly the proper thing for American citizens, in view of the extreme risks involved in sea travel under the new order of things, to refrain to the utmost possibility from placing their own lives and their country's peace in jeopardy.

GREAT PROSPERITY.

"I wish every pessimist in Oregon would take a trip to New York and other Eastern cities at this time and they would be thoroughly convinced that prosperity is rapidly enveloping the country."

This is the declaration of James A. Beckett, of K. S. Ervin & Co., who has just returned from a five weeks' visit in New York City, says the Oregonian.

"The extravagance of New York is amazing," he said. "All of the leading hotels are over-crowded and each day they obtain lists of unoccupied rooms in smaller hotels, so as to accommodate the overflow."

Mr. Beckett declares that although the European war started the present trade prosperity, it is not altogether responsible for it. "Confidence has had more to do with it than anything else, for confidence is the root of all prosperity," he said.

As another proof that times and conditions have improved he cited the fact that although another presidential campaign is near, purse strings are not being tightened nor business ventures or expansions held in abeyance.

MISFITS

An old lady residing here has about concluded that this is a selfish old world. She was walking along the Corvallis road, trudging along, while on the highway seventeen automobiles passing her, and not a single invitation was given her to get in and ride.

In the old days of horse and buggy a man who would pass an old lady without asking her to ride would have been considered a big porker.

It is to be hoped some modern inventions do not shrieve the human heart.

A big thing in character is unselfishness.

A good sign of spring is the demand for wall paper.

Gardening is already getting old.

Good weather often breeds the opposite extreme, which may mean some more unpleasantness.

But sufficient for the day is the weather thereof.

The ups and downs of the Lusitania beat a pump.

An extra session of the city council should be called to consider the matter of lamp shade hosiery, liable to hit Albany any time.

Aisaku Hayashi, perhaps pronounced hash, is the name of a big Japanese hotel man making an American trip, now in Portland.

Come to think about it, those tailors are liars.

There is a lot of difference between a real gentleman and what society calls one in the large cities.
