SATURDAY NIGHT THOUGHTS.

A real spring drive has been begun over the other side with Germany taking the aggressive in a desperate effort to finally reach Paris, and this she will do unless the Allies put up a better fight than they have done at east part of the time. This they will undoubtedly do, so that it is doubtful if Paris is ever reached by the Germans except after the war is over, and they again go there to get the latest fashions. Just now though, the fighting is desperate. It looks sometimes as if all the soldiers were being killed off, but some one says the proportion is less than in other wars that have made the world shake.

What will happen in the negotiations between the U. S. and Germany continues to be a matter of guess. No one can tell. Things look both ways. Some days the sun shines and the next it is all clouds. The Democrat continues to believe that our people should be warned to keep off merchantmen belonging to belligerent nations, and a bill introduced to make it a crime during the war to ride on one is at least interesting. There is this in the idea. The person who does ride on such a boat puts this country in jeopardy, and displays a mighty poor spirit. Wait for a neutral.

The air is full of presidential talk. One thing certain is that President Wilson will again run, the circumstances emphatically calling for this. It is doubtful if any one can beat him. The greatest mistake the United States could make at this time would be to put in a man of Roosevelt's impulsive, war like character, and it is hard to conceive that the people would do so, as much as they are inclined at times to go off on a tangent.

The Chinese war has been a thing of a different stripe, an odd kind of a spectacle, in which the Celestials are arrayed against each other over some kind of a disturbance, said to have been over a young girl. Men seem to have been selected to commit murder, with no alternative, and this has been carried out far enough to frighten the average Celestial until he is ready to keep in hiding, valuing his life.

There are all kinds of schemes to make a living these modern days, as well as during ancient days. Just now a case of professional blackmailing has come to light, attracting wide attention. Men should live such lives as to be above the blackmailer. It doesn't take much of a compromise to engulf one.

A candidate for school superintendent at Burns as a recommendation publishes the fact that he was educated at the Illinois Normal School, Iowa Wesleyan Univ., Illinois College, Leland Stanford Univ., and graduated from the University of Chicago. One thing our conscience is clean on is that we haven't published war news a year ago today.

The present war news is certainly sufficient, and then some.
