GARDENING SEASON.

The gardening season is here, one of the best of the year, and one in which everybody is interested, for there are few people who do not have some kind of a garden. How to get the most out of the least ground is a great problem. The agricultural department of the U. S. has been making a study of the question, and here are some of the results:

"Plan your back-yard garden on paper in advance" is the advice of the vegetable garden specialists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. A little indoor gardening of this sort will enable you to have fresh vegetables throughout the season and will make the same ground, with little extra labor and expense, yield two or three crops instead of the single crop commonly raised in small gardens. Where two or three crops are grown instead of one, a comparatively small garden will supply the average family with fresh vegetables all season. Moreover, such planning in advance will enable you to get the ground ready in time for planting and to secure your seeds and plant them at the dates which give each variety its best growing conditions. For example, if you will thus plan the plot to be devoted to peas, by the time your first crop is harvested, the second crop will be in bearing, and the plants of the third well advanced.

All the tools that are necessary for indoor gardening, which can be made an interesting recreation for the whole household, are a large sheet of wrapping paper, a ruler and a pencil. After looking over the garden and selecting the plot of soil best suited for your purpose, measure this and outline it on paper on a scale of $\frac{1}{4}$ or 1-8 inch to the foot.

Next, determine what can be grown in your climate under the conditions of exposure, soil and drainage in your back yard. This study may lead you to plan ditches to improve drainage show you that your soil needs finely sifted ashes to break up its stick character, or that you must add rotted manure, dried blood, bone meal, wood ashes, lime, or other fertilizers to make it suitable for vegetables.

Then comes the consultation with the family to determine the sorts of vegetables the different member like, and which, therefore, they personally will be interested in raising. Confine your selections to the standard well-tried sorts. Finally and this is most important, is the conference between the garden force and the housewife as to what vegetables really are worth raising in the back yard. It will hardly pay to raise in a small squashes or melons, which occupy a large area in proportion to yield, and which can be bought cheaply in nearby markets.

In general, the aim of the back-yard gardener should be to raise those vegetables which are either expensive or in which the flavor or quality depends importantly on absolute freshness. Peas and string or lima beans, to be at their best, should be cooked almost immediately after they are gathered. Peas kept even for a day lose their delicate bloom and sweetness. Consequently as much space as possible should be devoted to such vegetables, and other vegetables in which freshness does not count so importantly should largely be used as fillers to keep the ground at work.

The profit from gardening, however, comes not alone from the vegetables that are produced. The healthy outdoor recreation and exercise and the educational value of a garden in training children manually, and in inculcating in them habits of order and industry must not be overlooked. Fathers and mothers will find that the preliminary planning of a garden will do much to arouse the interest of the young people and encourage them to do their share in cultivating and weeding it. This will be particularly true if the owner hires a laborer to do the first heavy spading and lets the family begin its gardening not with heavy, disheartening drudgery, but on a patch ready for the lighter work of making the seed bed.

The plan once made out should, of course, be followed carefully throughout the season, especially with regard to the dates for planting. Where it is necessary to change a date this should be indicated on the plan. The plan also will serve as a convenient memorandum sheet for keeping a fairly complete record of the garden. On it can be entered notes regarding success or failure of the different vegetables, and whether too much or too little of any variety was planted for the family needs.

MISFITS

Poor little Portugal, what'll be left of her, after a few guns hit her small surface.

Already Germany has lost most of her provinces.

Turkey is fluttering in hot water.

And an awful debt is hovering over the heads of the entire crowd, more than ever can be paid.

Looks like a bankrupt Europe.

As a matter of fact, though, it will be like the big San Francisco disaster. They'll rise above the ashes in some form, because there is colossal

Mr. Tee is the name of a candidate for surveyor of Clackamas county.

The strangest duel yet reported is that proposed by J. F. Gould, an ethnologist and pacifist, who challenges any member of the navy league to swim out to sea with him until one or the other is drowned. He is an author, and wants to put to test the kill at any time idea.

Here's to the babies, our future rulers.

—It takes as much brains to raise a child properly as a registered horse or cow. More brains should be used in the work.

A fourth of the children die before the age of a year, because of poor management.

Another case for preparedness of the right kind.
