SATURDAY NIGHT THOUGHTS.

This week Mexican affairs have taken the front page in the news of the day, with the European war in the background. We are having a little jumpy scrap of our own. Small things sometimes cause an immense sight of trouble and this may possibly be something of that character. A cow started the Chicago fire. It probably, though, is not; just a chase after a desperado and his gang, under guerrilla warfare, with some sniping thrown in. Instead of an army following Villa, what is needed is a few thousand fast artillerymen, equipped for speed, aided by Carranzistas, who know the country. At least that is the way it looks to this military ignoramus.

The European war may have been just as tropical as ever; but it has not caused much excitement over here. The battle of Verdun is proving one of the hardest in history, and will probably in future years be narrated among the biggest of the war. If there has been any advantage a neutral observer is hardly able to name it. And, yet, all the time, slowly, like a caterpillar, it looks as if the Germans were making headway, just a little at a time.

Did you ever see a handball game? The men whack the ball against the wall time after time. Suddenly there is an opportunity and the player makes a stroke that kills the ball, something he has been watching for. War may be something like that.

An unpleasant thing in connection with war times is the manner in which men take advantage of the situation to rob their fellow men by increasing the price of things under various excuses, many of them without any justification. As always in the history of the world during war, a great financial game is being played, and millionaires are being made faster than ever. A certain kind of nerve is all that is necessary.

The highway robber is not always the biggest thief in the world.

There have been two national affairs this week, St. Patrick's day, one that always attracts wide attention, with its green coloring and good humor, and orange day. Not the enemy of the green, but the fruit, the juicy citrus stuff that comes from California in boxes, and is opened and sold for 25c, more or less per dozen, a fine spring tonic.

MISFITS

Uncle Sam and Carranza have started well together; but, Gee, how will they end.

These are days of colossal buncombe plays.

A great opportunity has been offered for securing political prestige.

Real patriotism doesn't have to have a brass band to announce it.

It is doubtful if any nation in the world has a people more universally loyal than the United States.

A man running for office down Portland way was recently called the following choice names by a prominent woman: "Adventurer, Jeremy-Diddler, rascally politician, blunderer, hypocrite, sinker, imposter."

The Mutts are not all in the pictures and on the stage.

The high cost of bungling is the lead of a thrilling article in an X.

When these fine days come we think we have the finest country in the world.

Don't hear much more about skeletons in the closet. Perhaps the name has been changed.

These are good sassafras days.

One would think to read the yellow stuff in some of the big papers that the United States will need to call out the entire country to go down into Mexico to hunt a bandit, without any equipment of worth, with little ammunition and no organization.

Have you done justice to orange day?

Time to begin practicing for April fool's day.

Turkey will be about ready to pluck by Thanksgiving day. It looks as if a big bear will do it.
