OUR TIMBER PRODUCTS.

The Portland office of the forest service has just issued the results of a preliminary statistical study to show the relation between the annual production of timber products and the consumption of such material within the states of Oregon and Washington. This study has brought out the fact that Washington consumes in her timber industries over six billion board feet or 82 per cent of her log production, and 87 1-2 per cent of all the wood cut from her forests annually, while Oregon uses in her timber industries nearly three billion board feet or 27 1-2 per cent in excess of her log production and 16 per cent in excess of the wood cut from her forests each year. Owing to natural geographic conditions, she draws heavily on Washington for raw material for her mills and thereby conserves her own resources.

Washington consumes 17 1-2 per cent of her lumber production, or nearly eight hundred million feet. Of this amount, more than half is used for building purposes, about 7 per cent by the railroads, over one-third by the wood using industries, and a small per cent in mine work. Oregon consumes nearly 20 per cent of her lumber production, or over four hundred million board feet. Of this amount, more than half is used by the building trade, approximately 12 per cent by the railroads, 30 per cent by the wood using industries, and a small fraction (2 per cent) in mine work.

When it comes to a per capita use of wood, the residents of Washington actually consume in the form of timber products, within the state 225 cubic feet per capita annually, as compared with 100 cubic feet per capita for the entire United States, while Oregon uses 217 cubic feet per capita. Eighty-two per cent of Oregon's consumption and seventy per cent of Washington's consumption are for fuel purposes.

The report covers lumber, lath, shingles, fuel, cordwood, poles, piling, railroad and mine ties, and fence posts.

MAKE RELIGION ATTRACTIVE.

In the April Woman's Home Companion, the Rev. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson of the Broadway Tabernacle has a sermon to grandparents in which he emphasizes the importance of making religion attractive for children.

"Grandparents can carry their religious zeal too far," he says. "They can harp too much upon the Bible and church. Exhortations lose their force when too often repeated. It is always unwise to make one's self a bore. Grandparents can render religion odious by talking about it too often and in the wrong spirit. Boys cannot be religious in the same way as old men, nor can little girls manifest their religion in the forms which are the most congenial to their grandmothers. It is foolish to try to make a boy like a man or a girl like a woman. God will not permit it. The Bible is an interesting book, and the church is a divine institution, and the truths of Christianity are of great importance, but they must not be made a burden. Grandparents must not play all their music on one string."

SPRING TODAY.

This is the first day of Spring, according to the calendar. It is the starting time of the year, that period for planting for the year, both in business and in agricultural pursuits. It is the time for thoughts to turn to matters of love. It is tax paying time. It is the season when the fish begin to bite. It is a time for politics. Nature at this time is fairly gushing over with freshness, lush and lusty. It takes very little to change prose to poetry.

MISFITS

The church that tries to operate without making a team of Faith and Works is going to make a sorry mess of it.

Man is a social being and whenever that is lost sight of a big spike is lost out of the structure.

The Savior of the world went about doing good as well as teaching.

The Chicago girl who fell ten stories on Sunday without being killed, in fact was out the next day, ought to be a drawing card for a movie company. She struck a wagon load of paper boxes.

Hot on the trail of Villa promises to be the program for several weeks.

The maker of moving pictures who's in at the death blow will make a fortune.

We watch with comprehension and apprehension these stories of aeroplane fights in the European war.

Geo. Washington may have been a great general; but he never saw a flying machine.

The newspaper office gets dozens of all kinds of circulars, propositions of all kinds, which are generally dropped into the waste basket, always full by evening. Today one came with a conspicuous slip labeled in big letters, PLEASE, among other things.

On Sunday, in Chicago, a lawyer was about to fill a pulpit of one of the churches when he dropped dead, due no doubt to the wonderful character of the change of environments.

Among other things the war has produced some new poets, some almost as fierce as the war itself. Here are a few verses:

The horrid war is still afloat
 We notice by the daily—
 There's little hope for Mr. Root,
 And Teddy's looking palely!

Berlin has sent another note
 About the Lusitania—
 Carranza has the country's goat,
 And Ford's forgot his mania!

Ament the presidential slate
 There's talk to beat the dickens—
 The G. O. P., we grieve to state,
 Confronts but slender pickin's!
