CHANGING FRONT.

Republican papers seem to take special delight in accusing President Wilson of changing his mind frequently. It takes a bright man to change his mind. The clams and chumps of intellectuality never change their minds. Men of character do, when occasion demands it, as it often does. A great many men never publicly change their minds and stolidly go along in the same old channels. One should not be like a vane on the steeple; but one should have character enough when the time comes to change front if circumstances call for it. Mr. Wilson is that kind of a man. A man of backbone, he is also a Christian man, with a clean conscience, and he acts only from principle, far above the peanut politics of the day, away from jingoism and the corrupting influences of the times. In fact Mr. Wilson is a good deal of a man, and when he does a thing we are willing to investigate it, even if it is against our viewpoint.

RICH MEN'S SONS.

The statement is made that one rich man's son in seventeen dies rich. The others waste their substance. Whether literally true or not there is a good deal in it. It suggests that the young man best off is the one who has to work for his standing in the world, his own architect, so far as his family is concerned. What he gets has a value beyond the intrinsic part of it. A silver spoon in the mouth is a curse, unless there is character above the mouth. Whatever begets laziness is an enemy of society. The mother of thrift is a friend. Those who learn to waste in little things spend their lives in the debris of failure, and this is one reason why young men with their father's money often do not know how to keep their heads above the tide.

CATCHING VILLA.

Not a large army of soldiers is needed to capture Villa, but a small one with speed and nerve; not an elephant but a race horse, or better still a gatlin gun equipped company of motorcyclists. His following is small, a mere bandit fleeing for his life, a coward when it comes to the issue.

VALUE OF SHEARS.

Register: "The intellect of the country is centered in the newspapermen and the attorneys," said P. H. D'Arcy, a Salem lawyer, in an address to the students of journalism in Guild hall at the University.

"Newspapers of the future will lead all great reforms and you students who enter the profession will be the moulders of public opinion. No class of people will wield more influence than the journalists."

"Lawyers and journalists are the broader minded men, as a class, than the men of any other profession. They are capable of grasping new ideas. In the days when men and women were burned for witchcraft in Massachusetts, men of both these callings were barred from acting as jurors."

"Editorial success depends more on the judicious use of the shears than on the eloquence of the pen. If one will watch the editorial pages that are the product of the greatest writers and clip out the best editorials, success is his."

MISMS

Getting Villa is like picking up a piece of mercury with the fingers.

Continue to keep cool over this submarine entanglement. It may untangle all right.

At a big trade at home meeting in Ashland a man in the audience arose and suggested that they order a lot of posters for the campaign in the east, where they could be gotten cheaper.

If the man was not murdered he should have been.

The percentage of homicides in Ga., a dry state, is 3.9 per 100,000. In Fla., a wet state right near it the percentage is 38.2.

Good 'un on Moon.
I went to the moon in a toy balloon One cloudless night in the middle of June;
But I was lonely as lonely could be Till the Moonman's little boy played with me.

He looked at me sort o' puzzled and queer,
Then picked up a star and scratched his head.

his car.
And said in a voice sounding faint and far,
"My, what a funny little boy you are!"

I wanted to play with his bat and ball; But since he hadn't any toys at all, We took a stone that was light as could be, And he played the jolliest game with me.

When we were weary from roaming and play We wandered far down the Milky Way, And drank our fill from a dipper of stars, Which the moonboy got from the hand of Mars.

After the Moonman had tucked us in bed, A fleecy cloud pillow in under my head, I dreamed my balloon went floating away And that I had come to the moon to stay.
