COMMUNITY CO-OPERATION

Guard: It is the duty of everyone to buy from the local merchant, if he can; but it is also the duty of the local merchant to meet the competition of the mail-order house.

The mail-order house is a great adviser. It places a list of its "bargains" in every household, as well as using printers' ink freely. The local merchant can sell as cheaply for cash, but seldom makes the fact known and frequently does not place his bargains with the household. He fails to meet the enterprise of the mail-order house with equal enterprise.

It is unquestionably to the interest of the entire community to keep the money at home by patronizing the home merchant, who pays taxes, rent and payrolls and does his share toward the upbuilding of the community.

It is unquestionably also to the interest of the entire community that the merchant in turn patronizes the home producer wherever he can; that he purchases all of the supplies that he can at home; that he gives preference all along the line to home-made products.

This duty of cooperation on the part of the merchant toward the home producer is just as essential as the duty of cooperation for the purchasing public towards the merchant.

The home producer must meet the competition in quality and price of the distant commission supply house or factory, just as the merchant must meet the competition of the mail-order house. Given this equalization, the merchant who fails to handle local products can have no legitimate complaint against the farmer who, denied a home market, in turn buys his merchandise abroad.

Cooperation is the keynote of community prosperity—the cooperation of the people, the factory, the farmer and the merchant. All must unite to build up home institutions to create local payrolls, to consume local products, that all may prosper.

"HEADS UP!"

"An expert automobile driver of my acquaintance," says Frederick Upham Adams in the June American Magazine, "has coined an injunction which might well be adopted by all drivers pending the adoption of the reforms outlined. Most of those who risk their lives crossing streets between intersections do so with their heads down, their half-closed eyes fixed on their feet. After successfully dodging such trespassers, or stopping in time to save them from injury, my friend good-naturedly sings, out: 'Heads up, friend!'"

"Few take offense at this cheerful admonition, and, as a rule, they lift their heads, square their shoulders, and bravely take an aler; way across the street and out of danger."

MISFITS

The nomination of Ben Olcott shows that even rep. voters are not easily frightened.

A man like Olcott who is the official of one party as much as another when he is in office, is entitled to at least a chrono.

When once elected a man should make no difference in his treatment of people, for he is the servant of all the people, not of a party.

A real thing back east that beats the movies was that of the man who went to church to pray for his wife, who was ill, and when he returned home his wife had eloped with another man.

Sometimes movie scenes look wonderfully exaggerated; but after all, in real life there are things happening daily that would make the liveliest movie story look like a mud turtle.

Portland police are showing their mettle again by catching the wrong man for a terrible crime committed near that city. They have some sleuths down there. Albany's chief could give them pointers.

It will be interesting to see the rep. papers all supporting a so-called dem. for secretary of state.

They will have to swallow numerous things.

Charlie Chaplin received many votes for president.

In this county a popular society woman received at least one vote for constable.

The reason a great many republican papers have been supporting Hughes is because he has a number of the qualities of Wilson.

It is pretty clearly demonstrated that the people don't want a high-flyer like Roosevelt.

And Cummins was a good deal of a frost.

One for the Movies.

He had a sly smile, anyway. And I should have known better than to trust him.

He grinned at me like a fox. I trusted him, too. In spite of it.

Why did I not recognize that gloating air, Why did I not know that behind those glittering eyes,

Lurked his horrid plot? But I submitted to him and what happened?

Well, what happens to anybody when they Go to the dentist.
