Disgusted With Humanity—

Today H. S. Logan, local agent of the Oregon Electric, is deeply disgusted with some forms of humanity. In this respect he has a grudge against a man who will not pay his bills. A short time ago one of his section hands was up against it, apparently. He had a wife and six children, but had a little money and owed a big grocery bill. The grocer wanted to garnishee, but upon advice of Logan the merchant desisted. The man gave an order for $10 per month out of his wages. One day he failed to show up. The merchant became suspicious and decided to attach the $18 that the man had coming to him. Today the county paid the transportation for the wife and six children to Centralia, Wash., where, it is said, the father has a job at $2.50 a day. And the irony of it all is that the transportation was secured over Logan's lines on charity rates of one-half fare.

SUMMARY OF RISTMAN-JENNINGS MURDER CASE

Albany Man Goes to Portland to Attend Funeral of Murdered Uncle.

Otto Kasten left on the morning electric for Portland to be present at the funeral this afternoon of his uncle, Fred Ristman, the murdered jitney driver, whose body was found in a thicket near Tualatin. The funeral was at 3:30 o'clock from the Kenworthy Chapel at Lents, internment being in Mt. Scott cemetery. The services were conducted under the auspices of Structural Iron Workers' Local No. 29, and the Oddfellows, both of which organizations Ristman was a member.

To Mr. Kastens, Fred Ristman was like a father. When Kastens' parents died he was sent to the Ristman home and grew up with the murdered man and his wife. He is deeply affected over the sad affair. Mr. Kastens and other members of the family feel sure that Bennett Thompson, held as a suspect in the Washington County jail, is the man who committed the crime.

The double murder of Fred Ristman and Mrs. Helen Jennings on the night of May 15 is one of the most cold-blooded and cruel in the history of police annals in Portland. The murderer hired Ristman, who was driving a jitney until times become better in the iron working trade, to take him to the Gore ranch, where Mrs. Jennings was living. Indications point to the fact that, thinking dead men could tell no tales, the assassin decided to put the driver out of the way first. Under pretext of being on the wrong road the driver was told to stop, and as the machine came to a halt, with the engine still running, a heavy, blunt instrument was crashed onto the back of his head, breaking the skull and cutting a gash 4 inches long. Several blows were struck.

Putting the dead man into the rear of the car the assailant drove up a side road and when he came to an opening in the woods he carried the victim 75 yards into the thicket and left the body sprawling on the grass. The pockets had been searched for money, no silver or gold being found. The trip was then made to the Gore ranch, the car parked at the rear of the house and the engine killed. Mrs. Jennings was killed with a heavy splitting sledge, her head being mashed horribly. The house was ransacked for diamonds and money that

Went to Funeral—

Arthur Bryan, who has been at Hoquiam, Wash., passed through the city this noon for Springfield, to attend the funeral of his sister-in-law, the murderer believed were there, but failed to find them.

He then returned to the car, soaked with the blood of Ristman, and tried to start it, but not knowing a great deal about autos, he was unable to make it run, so he left on foot, the car being found by neighbors the next day and the body of Mrs. Jennings discovered late in the afternoon.

Suspicion was at once fastened upon Bennett Thompson, an ex-convict, who had been paying attentions to Mrs. Jennings and who was at the farm the day preceding the murder. Ten days before Thompson had robbed some Japanese farm hands on the place, the suit he wore when arrested, and other articles found at his home being identified. He was arrested two days after the murder in Washington County and has been held in jail at Hillsboro pending satisfactory explanation of his whereabouts on the night of the murder.

A strong link in the chain of evidence being woven about Thompson is the bloody shirt found near the Jennings' home and an undershirt found on the clothes line at the home of Thompson's sister-in-law, with whom he is known to be infatuated, and the coat he is wearing. On the sleeves of the shirt and the undershirt are blood stains which tally, and it is thought that the stains on Ristman's coat will react to the same blood test with the shirt and undershirt stains. There are several other circumstances pointing to Thompson as the guilty man, and the police of two counties are bending every effort to make the evidence complete. The fact that Mrs. Jennings knew of Thompson's thefts from the Japanese and feared exposure and a return to the pen is now assigned as a motive for her murder.

The early finding of Ristman's body was due to one of his gloves being found about two miles from the Gore ranch by Chris Ladiges, who fitted it onto a fence post. Sheriff Hulbert, of Multnomah County, found the glove Wednesday and it was positively identified and mated to the one found in Ristman's auto. The next morning a party of searchers met at the Ladiges' farm at 6 o'clock, and at 7:30 the decomposing remains were scented and found by Deputy Sheriff Bob Phillips.

TRAVELS OF THE ORANGE.

At One Time It, With All Else Yellow, Was Barred From Holland.

Oranges were grown in Spain and Italy for centuries before they made their way to this country.

The first recorded appearance of the fruit in England is in 1290, when a Spanish ship arrived at Portsmouth with a cargo of fruit, out of which the queen, Eleanor of Castile, purchased fifteen citrons and seven oranges. The next notice is in 1390, when pomes d'orange figured among the dishes at the coronation banquet of Henry IV. By the sixteenth century they had become common enough. In 1500 the lords of the star chamber had oranges served daily at dinner at a cost of twopence a day. The first mention of their use as missiles occurs in the diary of Henry Maehyn, who tells us that on May day of 1550 the revelers at the queen's palace at Westminster threw eggs and oranges at each other.

Oranges were for some years a prohibited fruit in Holland. When the Batavian republic was established the badge and color of the Stadtholder's family became so hateful to the popular party that, not satisfied with expelling their prince, they passed a law forbidding the sale of oranges and carrots and ordering all persons who grew lilies or marigolds in their gardens to pluck up the plants and destroy them. This prohibition remained in force until 1806, when Napoleon made his brother Louis king of Holland.—Exchange
