BABY MARIE OSBURN
FEATURED AT GLOBE TONIGHT

The Globe Theatre will present a double picture and vaudeville bill for three days commencing tonight when J. C. Lewis, Jr., and company open an engagement. This clever child actor, who is but six years old, has circled the globe three times and has been over the Orpheum circuit four times, is said to eclipse anything ever seen here in the juvenile line. The Oakland, Calif., Tribune, in speaking of them says:

A novelty, which, before the week is over will have reached the ears of every woman in Oakland, is the "Billy's Santa Claus." In it are two children who bring to the stage of palpable make-believe a most refreshing change. Little Maxina and J. C. Lewis Jr., are the tiniest stars seen in Oakland. The act displays an accomplished family of five, tells a pretty story and wins everyone who was ever young.

The picture bill is a strong one, featuring another child actor, Baby Marie Osburn, said to be the youngest leading woman in the world, in "Little Mary Sunshine." Baby Marie Osburn loses her amateur standing as a guileless kid and assumes the professional dignity of an honest-to-goodness leading lady in movieland. "Lit-

ROBERT B. MANTELL, SHAKE-SPEARIAN STAR, HERE TONIGHT

Seldom is a photo play presented which contains such a strong cast as that which is shown at the Rolfe tonight with Robert Mantell and Genevieve Hamper in "A Wife's Sacrifice." It is indeed enough to witness a performance by Robert Mantell, whose Shakespearean roles are unexcelled by any other actor in the world, and whose interpretation of "Hamlet" is conceded by all, even other actors themselves, to be superior to anything yet done with the character of the melancholy Dane.

With Mantell are Genevieve Hamper, who plays in support of Shakespearean roles, and who is accredited with the "most beautiful face in the world." Then there is Stuart Holmes, that superb portrayal of villain parts, and in the role of Peppo he shines

"Little Mary Sunshine" is one of those "once upon a time" butterflies thru whose gauzy wing we see life in rare and delightful tints. Five reels isn't a scene too long for Baby Osburn, who, thank heaven, doesn't realize the charm of her fat little self and never overdoes the "saccharine stuff."

Baby Marie is assisted by a clever cast, including Henry King, Margaret Nichols and Mollie McConnell.

brighter than ever. The part of the Countess de Briquet is taken by Genevieve Hamper, and that of the daughter by sweet, wistful little Claire Whitney. Then besides there are Louise Rial, Walter Miller, Walter McCullough, and last, but by no means least, little Jane Lee, one of the most clever child actresses on the shadow stage.

Count de Briquet (Robert B. Mantell) in the Fox drama, "A Wife's Sacrifice," is the innocent victim of a plot drawn by the charms of Genevieve Hamper. The acting art of Mantell the great and "The Woman with the Most Beautiful Face on Earth" combine effectively with the dramatic skill of J. Gordon Edwards, the director.

The story of the play deals with the schemes of a designing man and his sister to get possession of riches, and the ways they take to do it forms the basis for a vampire characterization that is superb. "A Wife's Sacrifice" will be presented tonight and Saturday.
