SATURDAY NIGHT THOUGHTS.

If it is possible to watch the European war from an impassioned standpoint, without thinking of the misery and sorrow entailed, one can see a great game being played, with existence for the reward of victory. Skilled men are making the plays, knowing the board, almost seeing into the minds of their adversaries, acute with the responsibility, keen for an opportunity to make a checkmate play. As such it is intensely interesting, but alas, we can't keep our minds off the devility of it, the hellishness of the whole business.

The end of this week sees the gains decidedly on the side of the allies, who have taken the offensive and are smashing things on both sides of the field, the Russians on the east, the French and English on the west. It has settled down to a fight between the Russians and Austrians on one side, aided by the Germans, and the French and British on the other against the Germans. Others engaged have almost lost their identity in the fierce maelstrom, almost wiped off the map. A small country stands no show in such a whirlpool.

Our own trouble, that with Mexico, is being judiciously settled by the greatest diplomat of the age, and the present indication is that we will not have war, something sincerely wished by the masses, though not by the yellow "He Got Us Into War" sheets and landed and oiled interests. Securing peace for a country these blood-thirsty days is a greater achievement than thrusting a nation into war.

The common people of the world are for peace, and for those things that operate for peace.

A man passing through the city, was arrested and fined for having a revolver on his person. He was served right. Those who came in contact with him were not safe in his presence. This has been found to be human experience. He may be cool-headed and carry the revolver just for safety, but take a crowd of men, all with revolvers, and it is like being in a powder magazine.

A political campaign would not be a bad thing for the country if it were run along decent lines; but as conducted, with only the result in view, with no censorship on methods, it creates a sentiment of distrust in everything, whose influence is evil. If the game is to make people think the country will go to the bow-wows if the other fellow is elected, there is bound to be depression in business, and that's why presidential years are that way.

Albany's annual Chautauqua has begun. One of the pioneers, it is among the best, a school of education and entertainment, clean in its appointments, uplifting as well as pleasing.

MISFITS

An Albany lady, over 60 years of age, in taking a trip had her ticket marked as usual. The designation was "young." In the Pullman, after she had taken her hat off, showing her gray hair, the conductor looked at the ticket and then at the lady. Then he asked: "Where did you get this ticket?"

Misfits has seen three old ladies try to act in movies, great actresses on the stage, almost jokes in movies, and yet worth seeing because of their reputations. They are Lillian Russell, Mrs. Leslie Carter, and Anna Held. The latter came nearest looking young; but in her effort, she did what is sometimes called "slopped over," not acting naturally, like Billie Burke, Mary Pickford, Blanche Sweet and many others.

The y. j.'s are awfully disturbed because there is peace down in Mex.

A correspondent in a Portland paper refers to a y. j. editor as a copperhead, in a coat of yellow and slime, ever ready to strike an innocent victim with his poisonous fangs.

Theodore Roosevelt's picture which has been turned to the wall in the club room of the Republicans at Portland since 1912, has been turned face out again.

Five hundred saloons in New York City and 100 in Brooklyn were crowded out of business last year by motion picture theatres, according to Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the motion picture board of review, which has offices in New York. The percentage of drinking places eliminated in smaller communities is even larger, he declared. The moral atmosphere of manufacturing towns has been noticeably improved because of picture houses, Mr. Cocks said.
